TOWN COUNCILLORS

Public What They Did the Past Year—While Other Speakers Criticise Their Work Favorably and Otherwise.

The lack of interest shown by the public in municipal affairs this year was reflected in the size of the crowd gathered at the Town Hall Monday night to hear the nominees talk. Only about fifty were present. Mr. B. Kerrer occupied the chair. For the first half of the evening peace and harmony reigned supreme. Then Jos Henderson who was one of the nominees, started after Reeve Russell and Con. McCarter accusing them of using their office the past year to persecute him. The attacked Councillors uttered vigorous denials from their seats and afterwards took a second turn on the platform. From that time on there was something doing every minute.

Didn't Dilly-dally Says Andy

Mayor Johnston, the first speaker, thanked the citizens for reelecting him for a second time. He considered that the town had a very good Council the past year although they were inexperienced and they had worked harmoniously together. The Council had inherited an overdraft of two mills from the last year's Council. He believed that the outgoing Council would have an overdraft of less than one mill. One man who was running accused the Council of dilly-dallying with hydro. He hoped that man would be elected so that he could do something. The Mayor didn't think the Council could be blamed. The clerk had been instructed every month to write hydro. Both he and Mr. Collins had telephoned Toronto. He read a letter from Hydro Oct.23rd, promising figures shortly, and another written in December (published in the Telescope recently) stating that on account of the condition of the labor and money markets owing to the war, would be impossible to do anything at present.

Succumbed To Pneumonia

Miss Rose Lobsinger, daughter of Mr. Anthony Lobsinger of Hanover, succumbed to septic pneumonia at the Bruce County Hospital on Monday. She had been operated upon for appendicitis early last week and complications developed. The young lady was well-known in Walkerton, having worked here on different occasions.

Wins the D. S. O.

Among the Canadian officers who have been selected for military honours at the New Year, is Lieut-Col. (Dr.) Fraser, of Walkerton, who has been awarded the Distinguished Service Order. Dr. Fraser went to France at the beginning of the war as second in Command of No. 2 Canadian Field Ambulance Corps. He has twice received important promotions. Walkerton friends will be glad to learn of this further recognition of his distinguished services.

Better Still

The 160th. Bruce Battalion has done even better than was first reported for the Victory Loan. They subscribed a total of $30,400 which is more than twice the amount subscribed by any other Battalion, of this amount the officer's took $6,500. Paymaster Farquhar Shaw was a very busy man, arranging the boys' pay so as to enable them to buy bonds. The Batt'n put some Bruce "pep" into the campaign and as a result outdistanced all the nearby regiments.

Old Folks Remembered

The old folks at the House of Refuge were given a New Years treat by a sewing club, composed of the Misses Holm, Misses Nesbitt, Misses Flett, and Misses Hartless, Mrs. Singer and others. There was a parcel for each of the 53 inmates and the old folks hearts were gladdened by the kind thoughtfulness of the club. The inmates were also pleasantly surprised last week by Miss Halladay's public school class who brought along Santa impersonated by Mr. Clayton Tovell. Gifts were distributed and the boys and girls entertained the old folks with an excellent Christmas program.

Should Pick Good Council

With eight candidates running for the six councillorship, also two Candidates running for Reeve, the personnel of the Town Council is still an uncertainty. But we believe the citizens can pick from the field a fairly good council for 1918. There are no big issues before the council just now. Unfortunately hydro is not going to be ready at the expiry of the street lighting contract this year, but it is looming ahead in the immediate future and it would be well for the people on Monday to pick the men whom they can best trust with that issue. Economy is the policy that will best appeal to the ratepayers the coming year. Sit tight on the money chest would be a good motto. Real economy of course requires efficiency and we look to the incoming council to deliver the goods.

A Strange Mix Up

Vincent Pettepiace, a Riversdale young man, has got into a bad mix-up with the military authorities due apparently to a misunderstanding. As a result he was arrested yesterday by Chief Ferguson and brought to town to be taken to London by a military escort. Vincent enlisted in 1916 in the 160th Batt'n but was discharged before the Batt'n went Overseas owing to physical disabilities. Last month Vincent accompanied his brother to Harriston where the latter was to be medically examined. While standing out side the Medical Quarters he was whisked in, examined, and passed class A. by one of the officers, although he had no intention of being examined at all. The young man was then asked to sign a paper which it now appears was an application for enlistment. He returned to Walkerton then and appeared before the military tribunal here which granted him exemption. Having the exemption papers in his pocket he went home and stayed there until yesterday when the Chief appeared and arrested him as a deserter.

Christmas at the Hospital

Many friends called to admire the Christmas decorations at the County Hospital last week. The staff took particular trouble this year to make the place look Christmasy and they certainly succeeded. The halls and staircases were decorated with evergreens and red and green crepe tissue was used to shade the lights and were draped in graceful festoons across the rooms. The effect was very pretty and helped to impart an air of Christmas to every nook and corner. One little girl who had to leave her home in the midst of the festive season to undergo an operation at the hospital, had a Christmas tree all her own set up for her in her room, and Santa Claus didn't forget her either. There was another Christmas tree in the Women's Ward containing presents for everyone. At this season of home-gathering the sick ward is apt to be a lonesome place, but the kind thoughtfulness of the staff on this occasion went a long way towards dispating any heart burnings. During the afternoon some young ladies called and favored the patients with some music which was certainly appreciated. Miss Helene Whitehead sang "Abide with Me" and "Farewell to Thee." Miss Donalda McKechnie sang "In Old Judea," and the Misses Norrish gave some fine selections on the mandolin and guitar.

People Entitled To Full Information

The record of the Town Council business in 1917 has been printed as usual in the form of a Statement of receipts and expenditures signed by the Mayor and Treasurer. The Statement shows careful drafting but it is in such brief form that the public is given little or no idea of the town business or what the Council has been doing. For instances all we are told about the Waterworks System is that the water rates totalled $3,000 and the Waterworks expenses totalled $2,100. It is gratifying to know that the receipts were greater than the expenses, but the rate-payer, who own the waterworks plant, and are now engaged in the business of selecting a new Council, are entitled to know what the waterworks expenditures were made up of. What portion went to meet Waterworks debenture oayments, what portion for maintenance etc And to expect Citizens to form an intelligent opinion unless they have these figures is out of the question. One of the first questions, a citizen might ask is; How much was spent in fixing up the streets this year? The statement does not tell. It doesn't tell, except in bulked figures what any committee spent. The auditors' report will give more complete information next February. But it is too not in February that the Town Council has to answer to the people for their stewardship. It is now, not in February that the people have to pronounce judgment on the year's work of the present Council.

THE TOWN COUNCILLORS

hour, reviewed first his work at County Council. In the putting through of the County Good Roads By-law, he had had the trunk line east changed from the 30th to the 15th sideroad to the distinct advantage of the County and—of Walkerton. The Good Roads System doesn't take in towns and villages but they get grants from the County to help pay for the building of connecting links. He had secured a grant of $360 from the County this year for the streets of Walkerton, also $2500 for the Hospital which is $500 more than previous years. The Children's Shelter Com. of which he is a member spent $800 here this year. In all $3300 outside of the usual County grants, had been spent here. Mr. Russel claimed that the fact that he had supported the Union Governm. at was being used against him in this election. He dealt with the gravelling that had been done in different parts of the town and the two sidewalks built. The connecting link at the East End bridge was the most important. The Meat By-law he stated was a dead issue. The Council had no authority to pass a meat by-law. The traffic By-law had been devised to protect the public and teams from accident. Every town and village nearly had a traffic by-law. Come out of the bush, he urged the critics and don't knock the men who show enterprise.

Fred W. Lippert said he did not wish to deal with the work of the Council the past year, but he thought it would be more becoming to get the traffic before regulating it. The Council had wisely amended the clause re the tying of horses twenty minutes. He would like to have the two old war-horses fight it out for Reeve this year. He simply didn't have the time to give proper attention to such a position if elected. Later on he might try it again. He might consider running for councillor.

Would Give Citizens a Rebate

Mr. John Douglas, candidate for Reeve, said he offered no criticism of Reeve Russell's work at County Council, but he severely criticised the Traffic By-law. There was no danger of crowding on the streets of Walkerton at present. More traffic was needed. If the Traffic By-law was, as his opponent stated, the law of Ontario, why was it necessary to pass a by-law here. Mr. Douglas claimed the scavenger work in coning the people too much money. Ratepayers are taxed $2.25 and also pay their share of the sewerage expense, while the scavenger gets $1.97. He thought that people paying this amount, as well as helping to keep up the sewers and who couldn't get sewers, should get a rebate. Mr. Russell complained that the fact that he had supported Union Govt. was being used against him. He (Douglas) had not heard any man refer to it while on his canvass and he had mentioned it to nobody himself. He advised everybody to vote for the best man on Monday and wished the citizens a Happy New Year.

[Let Harmony Prevail

Rev. J. W. Sanderson recalled the fact that he had stepped into the breach last January, when a whole bunch of nominees drew out. It was not for honor but to do his bit for the old town whose citizenship he held dear. The connecting up of the sidewalk at the East End bridge was an important improvement, which should have been done twenty years ago. In passing the traffic by-law the Council had wisely added to the Pro. provisions such items as would be to the advantage of the public, having regard to the safety of all parties. Chesley and various other towns had traffic by-laws and the By-law only brought Walkerton in line with other towns. He was not anxious for the position, only anxious for the welfare for the town. He had urged Mr. Pletsch to run in his place as it was felt the East End should be represented at Council. Mr. Sanderson said that in this time of stress, citizens ought to respect each other's rights and each other's feelings and do their utmost to live in harmony together.

Boosts For Markets

Coun. Alex McCarter, who on former occasions has had very little to say, made quite a speech. He considered that the Council, largely composed of new men, had done very well under the circumstances the past year. He thought something worth while could be accomplished if the business men would get busy and co-operate with the Council. For one thing they could get together with the farmers and [illegible] to have a regular farmers market. It would be a nice thing to have 50 to 75 teams on market day. He understood that some grocers didn't favor a market. He couldn't believe it. The more farmers the better it would be for the grocer's business. Such things as fruit, butter would drive the farmers elsewhere. We want the farmers here. If elected, he would do his level best to serve the people as near right as a man could.

Coun. J. E. McGregor

Coun. J. McGregor said his work took him out of town a good deal and he didn't want to stand in a good man's way and would stay only to help out. Coun. McGregor said he had been chairman of only one committee the past year, the Railway Committee and as there was absolutely nothing for that committee to do, he hadn't much of a report to make. He didn't agree with what had been said at out 35 ct. butter. He gave the Manager of the Creamery credit for getting dairy butter back to where it should be. That was the price it had been in the surrounding towns. Some people said, U we have to keep the price of butter up. For those who like to pay more, let them stay right with it. Coun. McGregor said he liked to see harmony among the Councillors, and harmony among the citizens. If all work together, we will have a better town.

Spent Too Much Money, Says Major

Major Henderson criticized the outgoing Council for spending too much money. $2,900 had been expended on streets and sidewalks. In oiling the streets just after a heavy down pour of rain, money had been thrown away. This is a time when people are called upon to economize. Many of the sidewalks could have been laid over until times were better. When the town debt was consolidated a very much lower tax-rate had been promised, but it is getting higher and higher. The Council was too extravagant. He was glad to hear the remarks of Rev. Sanderson but Mr. Sanderson had sat at the Council and saw things put through with vindictive spirit and every member of the Council knew it. Couns. Sanderson and McCarter vigorously denied this statement from the audience. The speaker went on to explain the details of the right-of-way episode last summer claiming that Couns. Russell and McCarter had been actuated by personal spite. They reminded him of the old song: "There were three crows sat on a tree, who perched upon a dead horse's bare backbone to pick his eyes out one by one." However it didn't bother him a bit and certainly didn't hurt him any. He didn't want to influence the vote on account of it. He held no spite. He wanted to see the best men picked for the position and he thought there ought to be some new blood in the Council.

Coun. McCarter spoke again in reply to Major Henderson. He denied he had any spite against Major Henderson. Denied some of the speaker's statements point blank and he said that Reeve Russell had nothing to do with introducing the right-of-way matter. He had done it himself in the town's interests to protect the rights of the ratepayers without any suggestion from Reeve Russell.

D. McKerracher criticized the traffic by-law. He wouldn't be sorry if there were twice as many telegraph poles and four times as many farmers coming to town. It would be better not to bring in unnecessary by-laws of this kind. He wanted to know why and when the town debt had been consolidated, did the tax rate keep getting higher when it was to have gone lower.

Ex-mayor Lippert replied that extra street lighting had increased the rate one mill since that time, public library had made a big increase, and about 2 mills patriotic funds had to be raise for the County.

Coun. Sanderson challenged Major Henderson or any other person to put his hand on any unnecessary expenditure. True the wages of some of the men working for the town had be n raised including the street foreman, cemetery caretaker, and engineer at pumping house, but ratepayers would back the Council in their action.

"No Spite, says Russell

Reeve Russell took the platform again to reply to Major Henderson. He didn't know he was such a bad man until he heard himself discribed. He bore no spite against anybody. Only two pieces of sidewalk had been built the past year and another short piece completed. The most important was the connecting piece of walk at the East end of the town; and the people certainly wanted it. Major Henderson, he said, had had the knife into him for years, ever since he had crossed the Major by performing his duty in connection with a drainage matter when he was town constable.

Can the Personalities, says Chairman

Chairman Sherrer said that when he took the position of chairman, he didn't expect he would have to listen to a lot of personal abuse and raking over of old scores. That sort of thing had no place in municipal affairs. Harmony should reign. We should tackle these affairs on pure business looking to the future welfare of the town, not raking up matters that are past and gone. He hoped that next Monday the citizens would pick out the very best men regardless of race, rank, or religion.

All the nominees' names were called by the chairman, but several of the men were not present.

SUNDAY SCHOOL

Lesson I—First Quarter, January 6, 1918.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES

Text of the Lesson, Mark 1:1-11—Memory Verses, Luke 16:1, 2—Golden Text, John 1:29—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

The record of the life of Jesus Christ, which we now begin to study, sets Him before us as the perfect servant, rather than as the King of Matthew's gospel, or the Son of Man of Luke, or the Son of God in John. We do well to keep in mind the words, "Behold my servant whom I uphold, mine elect in whom my soul delighteth," and also, "Behold I will bring forth my servant the Branch" (Isa. 42:1; Zech. 3:8). If we would say truly "Whose I am, and whom I serve" and faithfully serve the living and true God, bearing in daily life the fruit he desires, we must consider him who was the only perfect servant, and abide as branches in him who is the True Vine. But this we cannot do till we have truly received the good news of Jesus Christ, the Son of God; or as it is written in Rom. 1:1-3, the gospel news of God concerning his Son Jesus Christ our Lord. We cannot serve the Lord till we have been redeemed by receiving Jesus Christ as our own personal Savior, according to John 1:12; 3:16, 18; 1 John 5:12. That being settled, then our whole life should be one of loyal service, with the perfect servant as our daily pattern, according to Heb. 12:1-3; 1 Pet. 2:21.

As John the Baptist was his messenger, preparing the way before him at his coming in humiliation, so the real Elijah will prepare the way before him at his coming in glory (Matt. 17:11; Mal. 4:5, 6). Meantime all believers should be preparing the way for his coming again by preaching repentance and remission of sins in his name in all the world, according to Luke 24:46-48; Acts 1:8. John's clothing was peculiar, and his food peculiar, and he pointed all people to the coming One whose shoes' latchet he was not worthy to stoop down and unloose. He claimed nothing for himself except that he was a voice, something to be heard but not seen, pointing to the one he came to honor, concerning whom he cried: "Behold the Lamb of God!" When told that Jesus had more followers than he had, he said that he was glad and added, "He must increase, I must decrease" (John 3:29, 30). As to a more full account of John's preaching see Matt. 3:7-10; Luke 3:7-14; He told them of some thing greater than baptism with water, even a baptism of the Holy Spirit which Jesus would give them, and he pointed them onward to the end of the age when the wheat would be gathered into the garner, but the chaff burned up with unquenchable fire (Matt. 3:11, 12). The future for all will be the Kingdom or the lake of fire, and even between death and resurrection it is conscious happiness or torment (Rev. 20:15; Luke 16:25). If this was really believed by all the preachers and teachers, they would surely be more earnest in proclaiming the Gospel of God concerning his Son, the only Savior of sinners (Acts 4:12).

The remaining verses of our lesson tell of the baptism of Jesus by John at the Jordan, and the event is more fully recorded by Matthew and Luke. In Luke 3:23 it is written that he was about thirty years of age, and we must remember those thirty years at Nazareth, the humble home, the carpenter's shop, the submission and obedience and patient waiting of all those years in that lowly life in which he no doubt glorified the Father as much as in his public life. This is a greatly needed lesson for all of us: not doing some great thing but just filling the place he assigns us, however lowly it may be.

We do not wonder that at first John refused to baptize him, saying that he had greater need to be baptized by Jesus, but Jesus himself baptized not (John 4:2). Note our Lord's reply, his second recorded utterance as the Son of Mary: "Suffer it to be so now, for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness (Matt. 3:15). He alone of all men was always righteous and did righteously. He had no sins to confess, but submitted to all things for our sakes, that he might be made unto us wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, redemption (I Cor. 1:30; II Cor. 4:21). If we are ever about his business, as he was about his Father's, we will gladly suffer many things for his sake which may seem to us wholly unnecessary. Luke 3:21 says that as he was baptized he was praying. Always in conscious communion with his Father and always pleasing his Father (John 8:29). This is the second time that we find in Scripture the words "the heavens opened," and the two events in connection with which we find these words form a truly glorious study, each event concerning him and his people on earth. In Ezek. 1:1, 28, he is seen as a man on the throne controlling his own redeemed and all their affairs; here he is the Word made flesh, submitting to all things for our sakes that we may in due time share with him his kingdom and glory. Mark well the Father's testimony and the Spirit's resting place, for he is the true and only ark of safety, on whom alone the Spirit can fully rest. Compare the Father's testimony at the transfiguration in Mark 9:7.

POINTS ABOUT LEGUMES.

Inoculation of Soil Often Necessary to Get a Good Stand of Clover.

One fundamental characteristic of a leguminous crop is the presence on the roots of nodules or tubercles which are infested by bacteria. These bacteria are essential both to the successful growth of the plant and to its value as a feed and as a green manure crop. They enter the plant from the soil, and it is obvious therefore that if the soil does not contain them in the first place the crop will prove a failure.

If a leguminous crop is grown for the first time in a field it is probable that nodule forming material of the right kind will not be present. They must be supplied therefore by artificial means. This process is called inoculating the soil.

One practical and effective method of inoculation is to transport soil from a field where it is known that the needed bacteria exists. Soil from fields of alfalfa, sweet clover and bur clover will inoculate a field for any of these three crops. Soil from red alsike, crimson and white clover is also interchangeable, and this is true, too, of the vetches and field peas. Cowpeas and soy beans, however, each require their own particular brand of bacteria.

Soil intended for the purpose of inoculation should be free from obnoxious weeds. It should be taken from the first five or six inches of the surface and spread at the rate of 200 to 400 pounds per acre on the field to be inoculated. As the bacteria are killed by strong sunlight, the transported soil should be spread in cloudy weather, early morning or late afternoon, and harrowed soon after. Where inoculating soil is scarce it is possible to save in its use by the adoption of what is known as the glue method. A thin mixture of chipped glue and water is sprinkled over the seed at the rate of about a quart of the liquid to a bushel. Then a sufficient quantity of dry, inoculated soil is mixed with the seed to make it dry enough to sow well. In this way the seed is coated with inoculated soil and carries this soil with it when it is placed in the field.

Still another method is inoculation by means of liquid cultures. A limited supply of these may be secured free upon application to the United States department of agriculture. Many of the state experiment stations also supply these cultures. Commercial firms also sell them. Directions for the use of these cultures accompany all shipments.

SHEEP INJURE TREES.

Animals Should Not Be Pastured in Small Orchards.

"Don't pasture the sheep in the orchard unless you have such large acres to feed over that no damage will be done to the trees," is the advice of Albert Dickens, professor of horticulture in the Kansas State Agricultural college.

Sheep are good feeders and will clean up a weedy orchard or any other patch of brush land in a short time, but the great danger comes in feeding sheep in a small orchard.

Too many men believe that they can pasture any number of sheep in a small orchard without injury. The animals, however, will eat off the leaves, limiting the fruit buds for the next year, and will tramp the ground, destroying tilth of the soil and slowing up growth and productiveness of the trees.

Some men have had success with feeding sheep in their orchards, but their conditions are different, as they have large orchards of 500 acres or more. The danger of injury to the trees is thus considerably lessened by the large areas which the sheep have to feed over. The best plan is to keep the sheep out of the orchard and let them clean up other weedy places of the farm.

Save Poultry Manure.

It is particularly important to take care of the poultry droppings. They should be collected frequently and kept so that there will be no loss of ammonia. An excellent plan is to deposit the droppings in a barrel, and when the barrel is full cover the manure with a thin layer of acid phosphate. The phosphate may also be sprinkled over the droppings under the roosts.

CAPITAL PAID UP, $15,000,000 — RESERVE FUND, - $13

Careful attention is given to the banking requirements of farmers, with whom a important part of the business of this Bank is transacted. Farmers may rely upon prompt and courteous service.

POULTRY PICKINGS.

During the period of high egg production many eggs are cracked, broken and lost because the pullet nest room is not available.

Give chickens plenty of ventilation at night. Give them enough floor space in their houses. Don't force them to stay in small quarters.

Put in fresh shading material often and keep it clean also.

Gather the eggs at least once daily. Keep them in a cool, dry place.

Eggs absorb odors very rapidly. Keep them away from decaying vegetables, onions, kerosene or other strongly odorous things.

Market the eggs regularly, two or three times a week if possible.

GREENS FOR FOWLS.

Poultry Not on Range Must Be Supplied With Succulent Feed.

If there is a shady spot in the back yard not suited to other garden crops it may be possible to grow some green feed for the chickens on it. Oats and field peas, before the hottest weather comes, and millet and cowpeas later in the summer, if sown thickly, probably will yield cuttings of feed that will be much relished in the small homery. While such a practice may not be in harmony with the best cultural advice, many city dwellers with limited space will wish to utilize all available garden room this season, even for only small returns.

Dense, continuous shade under old trees and shrubbery that have drawn heavily on soil plant food obviously will be of little value for this purpose. But in many back yards ground shaded by buildings and small trees, not wholly removed from the day's sun, might well be expected to produce some green stuff for a small flock. If the chicken pen is large enough a small sowing made inside and protected by woven wire with one inch meshes furnished about two inches above the ground may be made. This allows the chickens to pick off the green blades as they grow through the netting without injuring the roots.

Another way to furnish green feed to hens not on range is by sprouting oats in trays or boxes. This method is used by many poultrymen for large and small flocks. The oats are soaked for twelve hours in warm water and then spread out in a layer one-half to one and one-half inches deep on a floor or in a tray or tier of tiers which have openings or holes or a one-fourth inch mesh wire bottom covered with burlap, so that the water drains freely. The oats may be stirred daily and sprinkled or allowed to sprout without stirring until ready for feeding. They are usually fed when the sprouts are from one to one and one-half inches long, although some poultrymen prefer to allow the sprouts to grow two or three inches long before feeding. Oats need a moist and warm atmosphere in which to sprout quickly, so that it is necessary to furnish heat or to keep them in a warm room during the winter, while they may be sprouted out of doors during the rest of the year. It takes from six to ten days to sprout them, depending on the temperature. When oats are fed—roots, sprouts and all—the rate of about one square inch should grow in the tray to each fowl.

Deterrent For Hen Houses.

A disinfecting spray is made in this way: In one gallon of kerosene one pound of naphthalene. Let it stand for a day or two, stirring it a good many times to time. A box painted inside with this may be used for infected fowls in, covered with a tap cover, and left for an hour is a good treatment to destroy hen when taken from roosts before she is to be shut in a pen. brood. to scatter trouble lice may be kept in for twenty minutes.

Hens In Summer.

Hens on a fresh range, chicks will find worms and require less feeding of the cornfield is an excellent for summer chicks. Here are essentials for making summer hens well: Provide shade. Put the house or coop under a tree or else build a small artificial shade. Spade the ground under the sunshade to give the hens a place to shuffle.

Keep Down Insect Pests.

Certain precautions should be taken in the summer to keep the young chickens free from lice and disease, both of which cause thousands to die every year.

May Assist Halifax Sufferers

Warden Izzard took steps last week to have the county council make a contribution of $5,000 to Halifax sufferers. He presented the idea to the various reeves asking them to write him their consent. The replies were almost unanimous, but it was found by the Warden the procedure was hardly legal, and that votes of money must be made by the council in session. And it would mean considerable expense to call the council together and as the council is virtually out of office it was thought wise to wait until the new council assembles in January.—Port Elgin Times.

In accordance with the provisions of sub-sections 19 and 20 of Section 56 of the Bank Act, 1913, we report as follows:

We have audited the above Balance Sheet and examined it with the books and vouchers at Head Office and with the certified returns from the branches. We have obtained all the information and explanations that we have required, and are of the opinion that the transactions of the Bank which have come under our notice have been within the powers of the Bank.

We have checked the cash and verified the securities representing the investments of the Bank at its chief office and principal branches at a date other than, and in addition to, the verification at 30th November, 1917, and found that they were in agreement with the entries in the books of the Bank relating thereto.

General Farm Topics

SAVE THE BREEDERS.

Every Animal Capable of Breeding Should Be Retained on the Farm.

DON'T SELL BREEDING ANIMALS.

Maintain and increase breeding herds.
Feed cheap roughages.
Feed live stock as little human food as possible.

The temptation of high prices now being offered for live stock and the uncertainty about the prices of feeding stuffs have led to the selling for slaughter of breeding animals in some sections of the country. This is a serious mistake. Farmers should not sell their breeding animals unless they can replace them immediately with better ones. Every breeding animal is absolutely essential to the maintenance of the live stock of the country. There is a shortage of meat animals throughout the world and farmers cannot hope to import new breeding stock to replace those now foolishly killed off. Every breeding animal must be regarded as the seed essential to the domestic meat and draft animal supply of the nation.

Feeds not available or needed for human consumption should be used as largely as possible in feeding live stock. By feeding straw or corn stover, especially for wintering mature stockers and breeding animals, farmers will make the best possible use of these roughages. In this way a large proportion of the straw and stover ordinarily burned or wasted can be manufactured into meat and milk. Grain sorghums, wherever they are available, should be fed to release corn for human uses. Grain, where fed, should be used as economically as possible.

Every animal should be a factory for turning into food material inedible for human beings. This will necessitate changes in many feeding formulas, and stockmen are urged to apply at once to the United States department of agriculture or their state agricultural colleges for information as to the most effective and economical methods of feeding live stock under existing emergency conditions.

Pruning Necessary.

Pruning is a necessary part of orchard practice, says C. W. Rapp of the Oklahoma Agricultural College of Horticulture. An unpruned tree is much like an untrained horse—both can work and will work well if properly trained. It is true that an untrained tree will produce some fruit, but it will not do its best. Much of the energy that should be directed toward fruit production will be used to produce useless wood. The tree will grow excessively and will often become misshaped. Proper pruning—the removal of dead, dying, diseased and excessive wood—together with the proper shaping of the tree, is an essential part of successful orchard practice. Such treatment must be followed if the orchard is expected to produce fruit as it should.

Profitable Pork.

Eighty-eight pounds of juicy pork made in eight weeks, and in some instances as high as ninety to 100 pounds, is the pace made by the Oregon experiment station, and made repeatedly. It was done by using a well balanced ration. If such gains can be made on common materials in experimental feeding let farmers strive to do as well in home feeding.

Cultivate Cabbage.

It will pay in dollars and cents to take care of the cabbage crop this year, says M. F. Ahearn, associate professor of horticulture, Kansas State Agricultural college. Cultivate the crop, keep down weeds and fight insects. The most dangerous insect enemies of the cabbage crop are the cabbage worm, the cut worm and cabbage aphis.

THE APPEAL COURT

Made Very Few Changes In The Work of the Walkerton Tribunal—Judge Greig Exempts Farmers but Teachers Must Go.

Judge Greig sat here on Monday as tribunal appeal judge, hearing a large number of cases. The work of the local tribunal was affected very little by the Judge's decision. Only four cases which had been refused exemption by the local tribunal benefited on appeal, and only three cases granted exemption by the local tribunal, and appealed by the military representative. Lieut. Pinkerton, were refused exemption by the Appeal Court. Judge Greig based his decisions on the principle of refusing appeals except to those engaged in work of national service such as farming. Mr. R. D. Northgrave of Port Elgin, the official appointed by the government to represent the farmers, and Lieut. H. Pinkerton, military representative, were present.

Many of the applicants complained of rheumatism, which caused the judge to remark that this must be a very bad country for rheumatism. One applicant had been examined by Medical Boards according to the evidence, and the second time his chest expansion was four inches less than the first time.

The exemption of school-teachers, appealed by Lieut. Pinkerton, was refused by the Judge. Oscar Schwindt, teacher, was given until Feb. 1st to report, and Joseph Dietrich, teacher of Riversdale, was given until April 1st. The latter has been a particularly successful teacher, and Inspector Bald and the trustees claimed that it was impossible for any lady teacher to handle this school, but their contention was over-ruled. Kraemer, wagon-maker of Enniskillen, granted exemption by the local tribunal was appealed by Lieut. Pinkerton and the appeal sustained.

Ezra Hehn, thresher and laborer, who had been refused exemption by the local tribunal was granted exemption by the appeal judge, for the reason that he appeared to have a better case than his brother of Port Elgin, who is also appealing. The judge thought one of the two should go.

Wilfrid Dippel, dairyman of Walkerton, who had been refused exemption by the local tribunal, was granted exemption by the trial judge.

Edward Netzke, a lad whose parents sold their farm and moved to town last month, was refused exemption by the local tribunal. As Netzke has been engaged to assist Mr. Norman Brockel bank for a year on his 200 acre farm, the judge gave him exemption as long as he continues at farm work.

Becker, fruit-farmer of Walkerton refused exemption by Tribunal, was granted exemption by the Judge.

Winters, of Chepstow, refused by Paisley Tribunal, was granted exemption by the Judge.

CONTEST IN GREENOCK

Michael McNab is Opposing Denny Phelan for the Reeveship—Fight is on for Positions at Counc l too

The annual nominations for aspirants to municipal honours in Greenock were held at the C. O. F. Hall Pinkerton, on Monday between the hours of 12 and 1 p. m. and were followed by a lively and enthusiastic meeting of the ratepayers.

T. Purdy, clerk of the township, occupied the chair and announced the following nominees for office on his slate: For Reeve; D. Phelan, D. Pinkerton, M. McNab, H. Clark; For Councillors Campbell, Symons, Sawyer, Gilchrist of the old Council, R. J. Nelson of Paisley and S. Hawthorne of Greenock.

D. Phelan, the veteran reeve and victor in many a bitterly contested municipal battle, was the first speaker. He outlined the work of the past year's council, declaring that economy had been the watchword at all its sittings, practical evidence of this being the neat surplus which remained in the township coffers. He was a supporter of the Gov't Good Road's Scheme although admitting that it complicated the Statute Labour problem. He was accused of favouritism in the letting of certain contracts during the year, such charges he discredited, claiming that they were made simply to influence the vote against him. Although admitting that he had already enjoyed a long innings as the township's Chief Executive he declared himself as a candidate for re-election.

Mr. Phelan was followed in turn by Messrs. J. Symons, T. Gilchrist, T. Sawyer, and Jas Campbell who thanked their supporters for the confidence placed in them in the past and solicited their support in the coming election. Mr. Campbell considered that the present system of keeping the township road in repair was a farce and advocated the abolition of Statute Labour and the inauguration of a more satisfactory method to cope with this important though generally neglected item.

He considered this question too important to be decided by the Council, and was satisfied to submit it to the people in the form of a by-law for their endorsation or rejection.

David Pinkerton, though appreciating the honour conferred on him by his friends, declined for personal reasons, to come forward as a candidate for the Reeveship in the coming election.

Mr. McNab who followed criticized past actions of the Council alleging unnecessary expenditure and favoritism. He was opposed to the Good Roads Scheme on the ground that it did not benefit the masses and believed that Statute Labour was the most efficient method of dealing with the Road's Problem. He believed that municipal honours should not be monopolized but passed around and stated that the very creditable showing much he made last year's contest against a strong opponent, encouraged him to take up the cudgel once more.

A. G. Clark, rather than have the contest divulge into a three-cornered affair, agreed to withdraw in McNab's favour.

R. J. Hawthorne of Greenock, an ex-reeve, accused the council of employing questionable methods in the letting of a gravel contract in the Southern part of the municipality and that his division should be entitled to a representation in the Council. He was satisfied to guard his people's interests if the electors saw fit to elect him.

R. J. Nelson, was a doubtful candidate but solicited the patronage of the election should his name appear on the ballot?

All told, the contest in Greenock this year bids fair to be another battle royal with the chief interest centred in the struggle for the Reeveship.

Boys Given Seed Off

Two young Westerners, Troopers Norman Cunningham and Tom White of the Fort Garry Horse, Winnipeg, were home on a brief last leave the first of the week, while on their way Overseas. The people of the old neighborhood at Enniskillen got busy on short notice yesterday and gave the gallant lads a proper send off. In the morning a large company of neighbors gathered at the home of Mrs. White, Greenock, and presented to Tom a well-filled purse and an address expressing their high personal regard and their admiration of his action in enlisting to serve King and Country. The address was read, on behalf of the people of the community, by Mr. Joseph G. Carter, and the purse was presented by Mr. John Cunningham. Later in the day the same company proceeded to the home of Mr. Thos. Cunningham, Walkerton, and presented to Trooper Norman Cunningham, a purse of money and a well-worded address. The address was read by Mr. Carter, and the presentation made by Mr. Thos. Austin. A large crowd then went to the C. P. R. station to see the two boys off on the afternoon train. Both are fine specimens of young manhood representing the best that Canada is sending to represent her on the fighting front.

CAN. BANK OF COMMERCE

The annual report just issued by the Canadian Bank of Commerce, covering the fiscal year ended November, 1917, emphasizes the exceptional service which this bank, with its great system of branches closely identified with the business life of every section of the Dominion, renders to the country. During the year just closed, its assets increased from $289,000,000 to $344,000,000 the amount shown at the year-end being, of course far in excess of any previous total reported by the bank. Current loans and discounts in Canada, which item covers advances and credits supplied to practically every form of mercantile and industrial activity in evidence in this country, rose from $133,000,000 to $149,000,000 the increase for the year being $16,000,000. These figures indicate that the necessary requirements of the bank's customers have been fully attended to, notwithstanding the large degree of support which the bank has accorded to the war financing of the Canadian and British Governments. The extent of the new advances to Government is indicated by the holdings of Dominion and Provincial Government Securities and British and Canadian Municipal Securities, the increase in which for the year was nearly $30,000,000, taking this increase along with the expansion of the ordinary current loans and discounts a total increase of about $46,000,000 is shown. The two classes of deposits show a gain of about $47,000,000 and this enabled the bank to keep up its holdings of cash, bank balances and call loans. Its holdings of cash increased to $44,652,447 from $10,231,005 in 1912, showing that it has not neglected the duty of keeping strong under present conditions. With reference to the quick assets which stand at over $167,000,000 it is to be remembered that there will presumably be a heavy reduction of the bank's loans to the Dominion Government, as soon as the proceeds of the Victory loan are available.

FORMER WALKERTON LAD

Drowned in the Lake at Toronto When He fell Through an Air Hole in the Ice

Walkerton friends learned with deep regret of the drowning at Toronto of the young son of Mr. Joseph Marlborough formerly of this town. John who was a lad 16 years of age, was playing with two boy friends when the fatality occurred. The three were out on some big ice banks at Balmy Beach, and John fell through an air hole, dropping a distance of ten feet to the water beneath. There was only two feet of water where he fell but owing to the strong undertow of the lake at this point, he was swept beneath the ice and never seen again. According to the story told by his companions, the three were walking along the big ice banks when John stepped on the thin ice covering of an airhole. He disappeared, and the boys at once ran for poles to drag him out. The poles were quickly secured from a neighboring house, but when they returned there was no trace of the boy. Parties of men were secured and the ice in the vicinity was dug away until the water about ten feet below was reached. Owing to the recent mild weather the ice was thoroughly honeycombed and yielded easily. On reaching the water it was found that there was less than a depth of two feet, but no trace of the boy could be found. As the lake was running high and the current sweeping beneath the ice running fast, the police believe that he was swept from his feet and carried beneath the huge ice banks. The lad was born in Walkerton, his parents moving to the city about fourteen years ago. Mr. Marlborough was employed at the Rattan factory while living here. Mrs. Marlborough, whose maiden name was Nellie Moyer, is a niece of Patrick and Peter McGarity of Brant and a cousin of Mrs. John O'Malley of Walkerton.

He is now in training with a battery of artillery in Texas, but expects to get home on a lengthy leave about the end of February before leaving for France. Charlie Bryce Writes Home Describing His Wounds—Got Two Serious Hits Going Over the Top

Mr. Robt. Bryce has received the first letter written by his son, Charlie, since he was wounded. Charlie's wounds are of a serious nature and it is likely that he will make a long stage in England, if he is not returned to Canada. His lot has not been easy since he went Overseas. Last Christmas he spent in a military hospital suffering from diphtheria, and now this second Christmas away from home, he is in the hospital with serious wounds. Charlie writes:—

I am now able to write a little and let you know how I am getting along. I suppose you have heard by now that I have been wounded. We were going over the top on Oct. 26 and I had got about 40 yards when I fell and I surely did suffer. It was pouring raining and I don't know how long I lay in the mud and water and nobody around except a few wounded so I forced myself to walk somewhere till I saw more soldiers trying to get to the dressing station and fairly dropped when I got there. They had to put me in the ambulance and take me straight to the hospital. I was as sick as a dog. I got wounded in my right leg, just below the hip and also the right side of my head, just cleared my brain. Will be here a while yet. I guess I will put another Christmas in the hospital. Diptheria last Christmas. I am not able to sit up yet, Dad, so it makes it hard for me to write and I can only lie on my left side on account of my wounds.

RICH in its history of strong men and heroic women whose stirring adventures by land and sea set the imagination aflame, appealing to its wild scenery of lakes and streams and wooded hills, charming in the lawns and hedges and shady streets of its villages and towns, the country from Yarmouth to Digby, Nova Scotia is the Mecca of the historian, the sportsman, the painter, the geologist, and the vacation seeker. In this land which yesterday abounds in rivers and lakes teeming with lusty, leaping fish, and is clothed with forests of fir, pine, hemlock and spruce, home of deer, moose and bear, the Indians must have lived from time immemorial. Such a paradise for the huntsman must have been the subject of song and story among primitive

And here too the Norsemen came full five hundred years before Columbus set sail in his three tiny ships. Urged on by their dauntless spirit the wild Norsemen drove their war galleys far south and west from Iceland till they reached the land which is no less hardy race were to become Nova Scotia. It was at Yarmouth that Icelandic sagas tell us, boulders, bearing inscriptions in Runic, now may be seen near the town of Yarmouth—lasting evidence of that early adventure some one thousand years ago.

The STORY of WAITSTILL BAXTER

"Do you think you shall like that dull red right close to the yellow, Patty?" Waitstill asked anxiously.

"It looks all right on the columbines in the Indian cedar," replied Patty, turning and twisting the hat on her head. "If we can't get a peek at the Boston fashions we must just find our styles where we can."

The various roads to Tory hill were alive with vehicles on this bright Sunday morning. Uncle Bert and Abel Day, with their respective wives on the back seat of the Cole's double wagon, were passed by Deacon Baxter and his daughters, Waitstill being due at meeting earlier than others by reason of her singing in the choir. The deacon's fine horse, two wheeled "shay" could hold three persons with comfort on its broad seat, and the twenty-year-old mare, although she was always as hollow as a gourd, could generally do the mile, uphill all the way, in half an hour if urged continually, and the deacon, be it said, if not good at feeding was unsurpassed at urging.

'Aunt Abby Cole could get only a passing glimpse of Patty in the depths of the "shay," but a glimpse was always enough for her, as her opinion of the girl's charms was considerably affected by the forlorn condition of her son, Cephas, whom she suspected of being hopelessly in love with the young person aforesaid, to whom she commonly alluded as "that red headed baggage."

"Patience Baxter's got the kind of looks that might do well enough at a tavern dance or a husking, but they're entirely unsuited to the Sabbath day or the meetin' house," so Aunt Abby remarked to Mrs. Day in the way of back seat confidence. "It's unfortunate that a deacon's daughter should be afflicted with that bold style of beauty. Her hair's all but red. In fact, you might as well call it red when the sun shines on it. But if she'd ever smack it down with bear's grease she might darken it some, or anyhow she'd make a try at it. But it's the kind of hair that just matches that kind of a girl—sort of up an' comin'. Then her skin's so white and her cheeks so pink and her eyes so snappy that she'd attract attention without half tryin', though I guess she ain't above makin' an effort."

"She's innocent as a kitten," observed Mrs. Day impartially.

"Oh, yes, she's innocent enough an' I hope she'll keep so. Waitstill 's a sight han'somer, if the truth was told, but she's the sort of girl that's made for one man and the rest of 'em never look at her. The other one's cut out for the crowd, the more the merrier. She's a kind of meetin'ty, that girl is. Do urge the horse a little mite, Bartholomew! It makes me kind o' hot to be passed by Deacon Baxter. It's missionary Sunday, too, when he gen'lly has rheumatism too bad to come out."

"I wonder if he ever puts anything into the plate?" said Mrs. Day. "No one ever saw him that I know of."

"The deacon keeps the Thou Shalt Not commandments pretty well," was Aunt Abby's terse response. "I guess he don't put nothin' into the plate, but I s'pose we'd ought to be thankful he don't take nothin' out. The Baptists are gettin' ahead faster than they'd ought to up to the Mills. Our minister ain't no kind of a proselyter. Seems as if he didn't care how folks got to heaven so long as they got there. The other church is havin' a service this afternoon side o' the river, an' I'd kind o' like to go, except it would please 'em too much to have a crowd there to see the immersion. They tell me, but I don't know how true, that that Tillson widder woman that come here from somewheres in Vermont wanted to be baptized today, but the other converts declared they wouldn't be if she was."

"Jed Morrill said they'd have to hold her under water quite a spell to do any good," chuckled Uncle Bert from the front seat.

"Well, I wouldn't repeat it, Bartholomew, on the Sabbath day, not if he did say it. Jed Morrill's responsible for more blasphemious jokes than any man in Edgewood. I don't approve of makin' light of anybody's religious observances if they're ever so foolish," said Aunt Abby, somewhat oracularly. "Our minister keeps reasonin' as that it' [illegible] and I will [illegible] little more anxious to have our o'clety keep ahead of the others."

"Jed's 'bout right in, doin' up the Widder Tillson," was Mr. Day's timid contribution to the argument. "I ain't a readin' man, but from what folks report I should think she was one o' them critters that set up rocks bewilderin' an' bedevilin' men folks out o' their senses—eyreens, I think they call 'em—a reg'lar eyreen is what that woman is, I guess!"

"There, there, Abel, you wouldn't know a eyreen if you found one in your baked beans, so don't take away a woman's character on hearsay." And Mrs. Day, having shut up her husband as was her bounden duty as a wife and a Christian, tied her bonnet strings a little tighter and looked distinctly pleased with herself.

"Abel ain't startin' any new gossip," was Aunt Abby's opinion, as she sprang to his rescue. "One or two more holes in a colander don't make much difference—Bartholomew, we're certainly goin' to be late this mornin'; we're about the last team on the road," and Aunt Abby glanced nervously behind. "Elder Boone ain't begun the openin' prayer, though, or we should know it. You can hear him pray a mile away, when the wind's right. I do hate to be late to meetin'. The elder alters takes notice; the folks in the wing pews alters gapes an' stares, and the choir peeks through the curtain, takin' notes of everything you're got on your back. I hope to the land they'll chord and keep together a little mite better'n they've done lately, that's all I can say. If the Lord is right in our midst, as the Bible says, he can't think much of our singers this summer!"

"They're improvin', now that Pliny Waterhouse plays his fiddle," Mrs. Day remarked pacifically. "There was times in the anthem when they kept together consid'able well last Sunday. They didn't always chord, but there, they chorded some! We're most there now, Abby, don't forget! Cephas won't ring the last bell till he knows sitcowns folks is crossin' the common!"

Those were days of conscientious churchgoing, and every pew in the house was crowded. The pulpit was built on pillars that raised it six feet higher than the floor. The top was cushioned and covered with red velvet, surmounted by a huge gilt edged Bible. There was a window in the tower through which Cephas Cole could look into the church and while tolling the bell could keep watch for the minister. Always exactly on time, he would come in, walk slowly up the right hand aisle, mount the pulpit stairs, rest and close the door after him. Then Cephas would give one tremendous pull to warn loiterers on the steps, a pull that meant, "Parson's in the pulpit!" and was acted upon accordingly. Opening the big Bible, the minister raised his right hand impressively, and, saying, "Let us pray," the whole congregation rose in their pews with a great rustling and bowed their heads devoutly for the invocation.

Next came the hymn, generally at that day one of Isaac Watts'. The singers, fifteen or twenty in number, sat in a raised gallery opposite the pulpit, and there was a rod in front hung with red curtains to hide them when sitting down. Any one was free to join, which perhaps accounted for Aunt Abby's strictures as to time and tune. Jed Morrill, "blasphemous" as he was considered by that acrimonious lady, was the leader, and a good one too. There would be a great whispering and buzzing when Deacon Bumner, with his big fiddle, and Pliny Waterhouse, with his smaller one, would try to get in accord with Humphrey Baker and his clarionet. All went well when Humphrey was there to give the sure keynote, but in his absence Jed Morrill would use his tuning fork. When the key was finally secured by all concerned Jed would raise his stick, beat one measure to set the time, and all joined in or fell in, according to their several abilities. It was not always a perfect thing in the way of a start, but they were well together at the end of the first line, and when, as now, the choir numbered a goodly number of voices and there were 300 or 400 in the pews nothing more inspiring in its peculiar way was ever heard than the congregational singing of such splendid hymns as "Old Hundred," "Duke Street" or "Coronation."

Waitstill led the trebles, and Ivory was at the far end of the choir in the basses, but each was conscious of the other's presence. This morning he could hear her noble voice rising a little above, or, perhaps, from its quality, separating itself somehow, ever so little, from the others. How full of strength and hope it was, her voice! How steadfast to the pitch! How golden its color! How moving in its crescendos! How the words flowed from her lips, not as if they had been written ten years ago, but as if they were the expression of her own faith! There were many in the congregation who were silent, they knew not why, when there chanced to be only a few "carrying the air" and they could really hear Waitstill Baxter singing some dear old hymn, full of sacred memories, like—

While thee I seek, protecting Power,
Be my vain wishes stilled,
And may this consecrated hour
With better hopes be filled.

"There may be them in Boston that can sing louder, and they may be able to run up a little higher than Waitstill, but the question is, could any of 'em make Aunt Abby Cole shed tears?" This was Jed Morrill's tribute to his best soprano.

There were Sunday evening prayer meetings, too, held at "early candlelight," when Waitstill and Lucy Merrill would make a duet of "My cool Siloam's shady rill," or the favorite [illegible] "Ye two fresh young [illegible] falling in the tender thirds of the old tunes, melted all hearts to new willingness of sacrifice.

Praise, whate'er of earthly bliss
The pow'rful world finds dear,
Accepted at the throne of grace
Let this petition rise.

Give me a calm, a thankful heart,
From every murmur free,
The blessings of thy grace impart,
And let me live to thee.

How Ivory loved to hear Waitstill sing these lines! How they eased his burden as they were easing hers, falling on his impatient, longing heart like evening dew on thirsty grass!

CHAPTER X.

The Green Eyed Monster.

"WHILE Thee I Seek, Protecting Power," was the first hymn on this particular Sunday morning, and it usually held Patty's rather vagrant attention to the end, though it failed to do so today. The Baxters occupied one of the wing pews, a position always to be envied, as one could see the singers without turning around and also observe everybody in the congregation—their entrance, garments, behavior and especially their bonnets—without being in the least indiscreet or seeming to have a roving eye.

Lawyer Wilson's pew was the second in front of the Baxters in the same wing, and Patty, seated decorously but unwillingly beside her father, was impatiently awaiting the entrance of the family, knowing that Mark would be with them if he had returned from Boston. Timothy Grant, the parish clerk, had the pew in between and afforded a most edifying spectacle to the community, as there were seven young Grants of a churchgoing age, and the ladies of the congregation were always counting them, reckoning how many more were in their cradles at home and trying to guess from Mrs. Grant's lively or chastened countenance whether any new ones had been born since the Sunday before.

Patty settled herself comfortably and put her foot on the wooden "cricket," raising her buff calico a little on the congregation side, just enough to show an inch or two of petticoat. The petticoat was as modestly long as the frock itself, and disclosing a bit of it was nothing more heinous than a casual exhibition of good needlework. Deacon Baxter furnished only the unbleached muslin for his daughters' undergarments, but twelve little tucks laboriously done by hand, elaborate inch wide edging, crocheted from white spool cotton and days of bleaching on the grass in the sun will make a petticoat that can be shown in church with some justifiable pride.

The Wilsons came up the aisle a moment later than with their usual habit, just after the parson had ascended the pulpit. Mrs. Wilson always entered the pew first and sat in the far end, Patty had looked at her admiringly and with a certain feeling of proprietorship for several Sundays. There was obviously no such desirable mother-in-law in the meeting house. Her changeable silk dress was the latest mode, her shawl of black lace, how expressed wealth in every delicate mesh, and her bonnet had a distinction that could only have emanated from Portland or Boston. Ellen Wilson usually came next, with as much of a smile to Patty in passing as she dared venture in the deacon's presence, and after her sidled in her younger sister, Selina, commonly called "Silly," and with considerable reason.

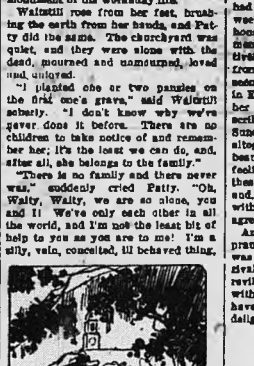
Mark had come home! Patty dared not look up, but she felt his approach behind the others, although her eyes sought the floor and her cheeks hung out signals of abashed but certain welcome. She heard the family settle in their seats somewhat hastily, the click of the pew door and the sound of Lawyer Wilson's cane as he stood it in the corner; then the person rose to pray, and Patty closed her eyes with the rest of the congregation.

Opening them when Elder Boone rose to announce the hymn, they fell—amazed, resentful, uncomprehending—on the spectacle of Mark Wilson finding the place in the book for a strange young woman who sat beside him. Mark himself had on a new suit and wore a seal ring that Patty had never observed before, while the dress, pelisse and hat of the unknown were of a nature that no girl in Patty's position, and particularly of Patty's disposition, could have regarded without a desire to tear them from her person and stamp them underfoot or, better still, flaunt them herself and show the world how they should be worn!

Mark found the place in the hymn book for the creature, shared it with her, and once, when the Grant twins wriggled and Patty secured a better view, once, Mark shifted his hand on the page so that his thumb touched that of his pretty neighbor, who did not remove hers as if she found the proximity either unpleasant or improper. Patty compared her own miserable attire with that of the hated rival in front, and also contrasted Lawyer Wilson's appearance with that of her father; the former, well dressed in the style of a gentleman of the time, in broadcloth, with fine linen, and a tall silk hat carefully placed on the floor of the pew, while Deacon Baxter wore homespun made of wool from his own sheep, spun and woven, dyed and finished, at the fulling mill in the village, and carried a battered felt hat that had been a matter of ridicule these dozen years. The deacon would be buried in two coats, Jed Morrill always said, for he owned just that number and would be too mean to leave either of 'em behind him.

The sermon was fifty minutes long, time enough for a deal of thinking. Many a housewife, not wholly orthodox, cut and made over all her children's clothes, in imagination, planned the putting up of her fruit, the making of her preserves and pickles, and arranged her meals for the next week, during the progress of those sermons. Patty watched the parson turn leaf after leaf until the final one was reached. Then came the last hymn, when the people stretched their aching limbs and rising, turned their backs on the minister and faced the choir. Patty looked at Waitstill and wished that she could put her throbbing head on her sisterly shoulder and cry—mostly with rage. The benediction was said, and with the final "Amen" the pews were opened and the worshipers crowded into the narrow aisles and moved toward the doors.

Patty's plans were all made. She was out of her pew before the Wilsons could possibly leave theirs and in her progress down the aisle securely annexed her old admirer, old Dr. Perry, as well as his son, Philip. Passing the singing seats, she picked up the humble Cephas and carried him along in her wake, chatting and talking with her little party while her father was at the horse sheds making ready to go home between services, as was his habit, a cold bite being always set out on the kitchen table according to his orders. By means of these clever maneuvers Patty made herself the focus of attention when the Wilson party came out on the steps and vouchsafed Mark only a nonchalant nod, airily flinging a little greeting with the nod, just a "How d'ye do, Mark? Did you have a good time in Boston?"



Patty and Waitstill, with some of the girls who had come long distances, ate their luncheon in a shady place under the trees behind the meeting house, for there was an afternoon service to come, a service with another long sermon. They separated after the modest meal to walk about the common or stray along the road in the vicinity, where there was a fine view.

Two or three times during the summer the sisters always went quietly and alone to the Baxter burying lot, where three grass grown graves lay beside one another, unmarked save by narrow wooden slabs, so short that the initials painted on them were almost hidden by the tufts of clover. The girls had brought roots of pansies and sweet alyssum and with a knife made holes in the earth and planted them here and there to make the spot a trifle less forbidding. They did not speak to each other during this sacred little ceremony. Their hearts were too full when they remembered afresh the absence of headstones, the lack of care, in the place where the three women lay who had ministered to their father, borne him children and patiently endured his arbitrary and loveless rule. When Cleve Flanders' grave—the Edgewood shoemaker, who lay next—ayeady resting place was marked and, with a touch of some one's imagination, marked by the old maid's own lapstone, twenty-five pounds in weight, a monument of his workday life.

Waitstill rose from her feet, brushing the earth from her hands, and Patty did the same. The churchyard was quiet, and they were alone with the dead, mourned and unmourned, loved and unloved.

"I planted one or two pansies on the first one's grave," said Waitstill soberly. "I don't know why we've never done it before. There are no children to take notice of and remember her; it's the least we can do, and, after all, she belongs to the family."

"There is no family and there never was," suddenly cried Patty. "Oh, Waity, Waity, we are so alone, you and I! We've only each other in all the world, and I'm not the least bit of help to you as you are to me! I'm a silly, vain, conceited, ill behaved thing,

"Oh, Waity, Waity, we are so alone."

but I will be better, I will! You won't ever give me up, will you, Waity, even if I'm not like you? I haven't been good lately!"

"Hush, Patty, hush!" And Waitstill came nearer to her sister with a motherly touch of her hand. "I'll not have you say such things: you are the helpfullest and the lovingest girl that ever was, and the cleverest, too, and the liveliest and the best company keeper."

"No one thinks so but you," Patty responded dolefully, although she wiped her eyes as if a bit consoled.

It is safe to say that Patty would never have given Mark Wilson a second thought had he not taken her to drive on that afternoon in early May. The drive, too, would have quickly fled from her somewhat fickle memory had it not been for the kiss. The kiss was indeed a decisive factor in the situation and had shed a rosy, if somewhat fallacious light of romance over the past three weeks. Perhaps even the kiss, had it never been repeated, might have lapsed into its true perspective in due course of time had it not been for the sudden appearance of the stranger in the Wilson pew. The moment that Patty's eyes fell upon that fashionably dressed, instantaneously dislked girl, Marquis Wilson's stock rose twenty points in the market. She ceased in a jiffy to weigh and consider and criticise the young man, but regarded him with wholly new eyes. This Eyre was better than she had realized, his smile more interesting, his manners more attractive, his eyelashes longer; in a word, he had suddenly grown desirable. A month ago she could have observed with idle and alien curiosity the spectacle of his thumb drawing nearer to another (feminine) thumb in the page of the "Watts and Select Hymn Book." Now, at the morning service, she had wished nothing so much as to put Mark's thumb back into his pocket where it belonged and slap the girl's thumb smartly and soundly as it deserved.

The ignorant cause of Patty's distress was a certain Annabel Franklin, the daughter of a cousin of Mrs. Wilson's. Mark had stayed at the Franklin house during his three weeks' visit in Boston, where he had gone on business for his father. The young people had naturally seen much of each other and Mark's inflammable fancy had been so kindled by Annabel's doll-like charms that he had persuaded her to accompany him to his home and get a taste of country life in Maine. Such is man, such is human nature and such is life, that Mark had no sooner got the whilom object of his affections under his own roof than she began to pall.

Annabel was twenty-three, and, to tell the truth, she had pulled before more than once. She was so amiable, so well finished—with her smooth flaxen hair, her neat nose, her buttonhole of a mouth and her trig shape—that she appealed to the opposite sex quite generally and irresistibly as a worthy helpmate. The only trouble was that she began to bore her suitors somewhat too early in the game, and they never got far enough to propose marriage. Flaws in her apparent perfection appeared from day to day and chilled the growth of the various young loves that had budded so auspiciously. She always agreed with everybody and everything in sight, even to the point of changing her mind on the instant if circumstances seemed to make it advisable. Her instinctive point of view, where she went as far as to hold one, was somewhat cut and dried—in a word, priggish. Her father had an ample fortune, and some one would inevitably turn up who would regard Annabel as an altogether worthy and desirable spouse. That was what she had seemed to Mark Wilson for a full week before he left the Franklin house in Boston, but there were moments when he regretted, indistinctly, that he had ever removed her from her proper sphere. She did not seem to fit into the conditions of life in Edgewood, and it may even be that her most glaring fault had been to describe Patty Baxter's hair at this very Sunday dinner as "carroty," her dress altogether "dreadful" and her style of beauty "unladylike." Ellen Wilson's feelings were somewhat injured by these criticisms of her intimate friend, and, in discussing the matter privately with her brother, he was inclined to agree with her.

And thus, so little do we know of the prankishness of the blind god, thus was Annabel Franklin working for her rival's best interests, and, instead of reviling her in secret and treating her with disdain in public, Patty should have welcomed her cordially to all the delights of Riverboro society.

CHAPTER XI.

Haying Time.

EVERYBODY in Riverboro, Edgewood, Milliken's Mills, Spruce Swamp, Duck Pond and Moderation was "haying." There was a perfect frenzy of haying, for it was the Monday after the Fourth, the precise date in July when the Maine farmer said goodby to reposo and "hayed" desperately and unceasingly until every spear of green in his section was mowed down and safely under cover.

If a man had grass of his own he cut it, and if he had none he assisted in cutting that of some other man, for "to hay," although an unconventional verb, was, and still is, a very active one and in common circulation, although not used by the grammarians.

Whatever your trade and whatever your profession, it counted as naught in good weather. The fish man stopped selling fish, the meat man ceased to bring meat, the cobbler as well as the judge forsook the bench, and even the doctor made fewer visits than usual. The wage for work in the hayfields was a high one, and every man, boy and horse in a village was pressed into service.

When Ivory Boynton had finished with his own small crop he commonly went at once to Lawyer Wilson, who had the largest acreage of hay land in the township. Ivory was always in great demand, for he was a mighty worker in the field and a very giant at "pitching," being able to pick up a fair sized haycock at one stroke of the fork and fling it on to the cart as if it were a feather.

Lawyer Wilson always took a hand himself if signs of rain appeared, and Mark occasionally visited the scene of action when a crowd in the field made a general jollification or when there was an impending thunderstorm.

In such cases even women and girls joined the workers and all hands bent together to the task of getting a load into the barn and covering the rest.

Deacon Baxter was wont to call Mark Wilson a "worthless, whey faced, lily handed whelp," but the description, though picturesque, was decidedly exaggerated. Mark disliked manual labor; but, having imbibed a modicum knowledge of law in his father's office to be an excellent clerk, he much preferred traveling about, settling the details of small cases, collecting rents and bad bills, to any form of work on a farm. This sort of life, on stage coaches and railway trains or on long driving trips with his own fast "trotter," suited his adventurous disposition and gave him a sense of importance that was very necessary to his peace of mind. He was not especially intimate with Ivory Boynton, who studied law with his father during all vacations and in every available hour of leisure during term time, as did many another young New England schoolmaster.

Mark's father's praise of Ivory's legal ability was a little too warm to please his son, as was the commendation of one of the county judges on Ivory's preparation of a brief in a certain case in the Wilson office. Ivory had drawn it up at Mr. Wilson's request merely to show how far he understood the books and cases he was studying, and he had no idea the result differed in any way from the work of any other student. All the same Mark's own efforts in a like direction had never received any special attention.

When he was in the hayfield [illegible] kept as far as possible from Ivory, because there, too, he felt a superiority that made him for the moment a trifle disconcerted. It was no particular pleasure for him to see Ivory plunge his fork deep into the heart of a haycock, take a firm grasp of the handle thrust forward his foot to steady his self and then raise the great fragrant mass slowly and swing it up to the waiting hay cart amid the applause of the crowd.

Rodman would be there, too, helping the man on top of the load and getting nearly buried each time as the mass descended upon him, but doing his slender best to distribute and tread it down properly, while his young face glowed with pride at Cousin Ivory's prowess.

Independence day had passed, with its usual gayeties for the young people, in none of which the Baxter family had joined, and now, at [illegible] ing this burning July morning, Mark was driving the old mare past Wilson farm on her way to the [illegible]

Her father was working there, together with the two hired men whom he took on for a fortnight during the height of the season. If mowing, raking, pitching and carting of the precious crop could only have been done at cold times during the year or we might be would not have exhilarated the month of July by paying out money for labor. But nature has ingenious ways in the ripening of hay, and Obadiah Foxy was obliged to succumb to the inevitable.

Waitstill had a basket packed with luncheon for three and a great demijohn of cool ginger tea under the wagon seat. Other farmers sometimes served hard cider or rum, but her father's principles were dead against this riotous extravagance. Temperance in any and all directions, was chief and the deacon was a very temperate man, save in language.

The fields on both sides of the road were full of haymakers, and [illegible] where there was beside and [illegible] There would be three or four men—or leading the others following—stolidly swinging their scythes through a piece of grass, and the small of the mown fields in the sunshine was sweeter than honey in the comb.

There were patches of black eyed Susans in the meadows here and there, while pink and white hardhack grew by the road, with day lilies and bouncing milkweed. The bobolink was flitting from every tree. There were thrushes in the alder bushes and robins in the tops of the elms, and Waitstill's heart overflowed with joy at being in such a world of midsummer beauty, though life during the [illegible] heat and incessant work of hay time was a little more rigorous than usual.

The extra food needed for the [illegible] men always kept her father in a state of mind closely resembling insanity. Coming downstairs to cook breakfast she would find the coffee or tea poured out for the pot. The increased consumption of milk angered him beyond words, because it lessened the supply of butter for sale.

Everything that could be made into buttermilk was ordered so to be done, and nothing but water could be used in mixing the raised bread. Pies and cake must never have an egg; the breast must be shortened only with lard or with a mixture of beef fat and [illegible] ping, and so on, and so on, eterna

When the girls were respectively [illegible] nteen and thirteen, Waitstill had [illegible] ed a small plot of ground for them to use as they liked, and beginning that time, they had gradually made little gardens, with a couple of [illegible] ress and a thicket of red, white, black currants, raspberry and [illegible] berry bushes.

For several summers now they had sold enough of their own fruit to buy a pair of shoes or gloves, a scarf or hat, but even this tiny income was beginning to be menaced. The deacon positively suffered as he looked at the odd corner of ground, not any bigger than his barn floor, and saw what his girls had done with no tools but a spade and a hoe and no help but their own hands. He had no leisure (so he growled) to cultivate and fertilize

Prosperity In West

Mr. Walter Scott of Calgary who, with Mrs. Scott is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Vogan, states that business conditions have shown a marked improvement in Alberta the past year. Farmers have more money than in many years and distributing centres, such as Calgary, have quickly benefitted from improved conditions. A sign of the times is that the more expensive lines of autos are finding a ready market in the farming communities. Merchants are prospering but are careful about credit. Mr. Scott travels out of Calgary for a large wholesale confectionery and fruit firm and finds the business outlook encouraging throughout that part of country.

Touched the Low Spots

For weather the past few days has been just as cold as it felt. Sunday broke all records for frigidity around here for a number of years. Thursday the first cold chased the mercury down to 3 below. Then Friday it dipped to 10 then Saturday to 20, and Sunday to 25 degrees below. These figures were taken from the Government thermometer at N. P. Schmidt's fruit farm. Other thermometers gave lower readings some touching thirty-five below. Mr. Schmidt says that Sunday morning was the coldest since he got the govt. thermometer 8 years ago. The next coldest was the 12th of February last when the mercury touched 31 below. The severe weather proved too much for the water pipes around town. Pipes that had never been frozen before succumbed and for a couple of days plumbers were run off their feet answering the many calls for help.

FALLING IN LOVE WITH YOHO

(1) The Famous Takakkaw Falls. (2) / Camping under the Takakkaw Falls.
(3) Mount Stephen

AMONGST the Canadian Rockies you meet folk from all over the world. And you really do meet them, not just read the tags on their luggage. People who wouldn't dream of following up their inclination to know you if they met you on Michigan Avenue or Broadway, calmly introduces themselves. And you part friends.

I'd been staying at the Glacier, where I knew everybody from the waiters up, and when I had to leave and go east again I'd have cried on Sir Donald's shoulder, if he hadn't been ten thousand feet above sea level and covered with a week's snow at that.

"Oh, but you'll make friends at Field," they told me comfortingly. "Mount Stephen will take Sir Donald's place in your heart."

Field is a little bit of a town that looks as though it had been washed up by the Kicking Horse River and thrown at the feet of Mts. Stephen and Dennis, where it hangs on by means of the long twin-steel rope of the track.

On the train between Field and Lake Louise you pass the gigantic gate posts of the Yoho Valley, a few minutes out of Field. But it took us more than four miles of scenic road way to reach there, passing en route the aerial silver mine whose great dark doorway, perched hundreds of feet above us, looked like a swallow's nest for very littleness.

Next morning we were up bright and early for the beautiful drive through the Yoho Valley.

After passing Cache Creek the road turned sharply to the left and we entered the valley that grows narrower and deeper and awesomer and steeper for close on six miles. Here the crystal Kicking Horse falls into the glacial-muddy Yoho, with a result that reminds you of marble cake until the two streams are thoroughly mixed.

Mt. Ogden towers 8,795 feet to our right as we swing round the corner of Mt. Field. Mt. Niles, a thousand feet taller still, lies north again, and behind is Balfour another thousand step up into the blue.

The valley narrows. The plucky horses take one switchback after another as the trail goes up the mountain in a series of sharp Z's. The road, however, is a miracle of picturesque engineering.

At last the roaring river-it does roar between the granite bank of its long course-is a hundred and fifty feet below and the bank on which the horses plunge in so steep that it is almost undercut. You can hear the boulders underfoot. Yoho, and if there weren't steep fences on which to lean undoubtedly mother wouldn't put out of the carriage to love Canada at closer range. As it is, we chance the lonesome awesomeness of [illegible] dark gorge.

The valley widens again. The [illegible] are treed to their rising above us and [illegible] seem steep bare precipices, and higher still the snow.

And then at last we came to Takakkaw.

The Indians looked at the awaying curtain of it and they said to one another, "Takakkaw!" which means "how wonderful." Over on the other side of the valley lies the camp which in a way deserves a "Takakkaw" of its own. There are bough beds and little stoves in every tent; there is the magic teepee in the centre of the clearing where the nightly fire coaxes grizzly stories out of the guides.

Not far from camp there is a big stream coming down the mountainside to the left, which, when it hits the valley branches into a perfect family tree of streamlets, a dozen big ones and dear knows how many grandchildren brooks that run here and there like fresh air excursion kiddies on a farm. Every winter the configuration of the place changes and the streams shout and begin all over again. No wonder the trail got lost.

We raced over the boulders. But boulders are treacherous animals to play with and will bite you in the back. This one didn't approve of being raced over. The worm turned. I turned too-and quite a somersault Sandford on my hands and knees in one of the grandchildren-brooklets, [illegible] a long hot ten minutes. I was glad the sun on the [illegible] were strong and drying.

[illegible] I cried, the fountains of [illegible] sympathy carefully [illegible] "Did you go and fall in love with the Yoho too?"

KNOX PASTOR AND WIFE

Easter are Waited Upon by Friends and Made the Recipients of Handsome Gifts During the Past Week

A number of Rev. Mr. Wilson's friends in Knox Congregation showed their appreciation of their pastor's services in a tangible way by calling at the Manse and presenting him with an address and a substantial purse containing $200. The money had been gathered to present to Mr. Wilson on the occasion of the approaching anniversary of his pastorate but his resignation coming when it did, it was decided to make the presentation at this time. The address to Rev. Mr. Wilson was:—

Rev. Thomas Wilson,
Walkerton.

Dear Sir,

Your many friends in the Congregation of Knox Church learned with sincere regret of your approaching withdrawal as their pastor. Some time since a movement was on foot to express our appreciation of your faithful and self sacrificing service as our pastor extending over a period of more than fifteen years. Not only as minister of Knox Church but as leader in every cause for the public good and most particularly in every Patriotic movement this community owes you a debt of gratitude that cannot be expressed in mere words. We know that the affection and sympathy we feel for you is very wide-spread and should it be found that your decision to enter some other field of usefulness is final we wish you and Mrs. Wilson who, by her kindness, tact and ability in seconding your own labours in all departments of the work has endeared herself to us all, very many years of success and happiness. As a slight token of our affectionate esteem we beg you to accept the accompanying purse.

On Monday afternoon Mrs. Rowland had a tea for some of Mrs. Wilson's friends and they presented her with a beautiful gold wristwatch and a sum of money in gold. The presentation was made by Mrs. Rowland who said:—

"Will you please accept this wee personal gift from a few of your friends gathered here this afternoon and we hope you will have as much pleasure in the wearing of it as we ladies have had in the giving of it."

Mr. and Mrs. Harry McDougall and family left on Tuesday to make their home in West Toronto, where Harry has had a position as brakesman on the C. P. R. since he returned from Overseas. They take with them the best wishes of many friends in Walkerton.

Mildmay Man In Trouble

Joseph Schmidt, a Mildmay young man, who has been working in the G. T. R. shops at Stratford, appeared in police court in that city on Tuesday, charged with using seditious language. 'All soldiers over there and all soldiers on their way over should be killed,' are the words which his boarding house keeper and her daughter declared he used. He pleaded not guilty, but the Magistrate found him guilty on the evidence of the two women remanding him for sentence.

Gets After Incomes

The Town Assessment is due to receive a slight boost this year under the heading of Income. In the past professional men who pay a business tax, have not been paying income tax but Assessor McGill has discovered that under the Statute they are entitled to pay a tax on all income in excess of their business assessment plus $1500. For instance a lawyer who has a business assessment of $250, will pay income tax on all income over $1750. This finding will affect several tax payers in the town.

C. P. R. Takes Morning Mail

Since Monday the C. P. R. morning train has been taking mail. This means that we have two outgoing mails a day for Toronto and intermediate points. Since the cutting off of the trains, it has been impossible to get off an answer to mail the same day as received and the new morning mail relieves the situation considerably. In reply to Mayor Johnston's telegram asking for the morning mail the Inspector of Railway Mail Service writes that mail will be taken for points east on Saugeen line, points north and south of Durham and Hanover, also Toronto and Owen Sound.

Two Brothers Now Laid Up

Trouble never comes singly. It is only a couple of weeks since Noah Stroeder of the South Line, while helping his brother, Alex., had his arm seriously injured in a straw cutter. Again on Thursday last, when Alex. was over in Noah's bush hauling out wood for his injured brother, he had his leg broken and will be laid up for two or three months. Alex. was taking his last load and took his team off the sleigh to loosen a small log when it suddenly struck a snag and swung around striking his leg. It all happened in an instant. Both bones of his leg were fractured four inches above the ankle. Jim Hyslop, who is always ready to help a friend in need, was with him at the time, drove him home and relieved the situation by cancelling his other engagements for the week and staying right with him. The Stroeder brothers are known as hard workers, good neighbours, and they have every body's sympathy in their double portion of hard luck.

TOWN COUNCIL MINUTES

Members Talk Hydro And Agree That Town Should Keep Right After Hydro Commission—Election for P. S. Trustee

The Town Council held its regular monthly session on Monday night and dealt with a large budget of business. All the members were present.

Communications

A reply to Mayor Johnston's telegram urging that the C. P. R morning train carry mail, was read from the Supt. of Railway mail service at Toronto. The letter stated that this train would start carrying mail on Monday morning March 11th to Hanover, Durham, points north and south of those towns, and to Toronto and Owen Sound.

Mr. David Robertson submitted a draft petition to the authorities asking that the C. P. R. train be held at Saugeen Jan. until night. By this means the town could get the same mail service as before and it would be possible for citizens to go to Toronto in the morning and return the same day. Mayor Johnston thought the idea was alright but that the C. P. wouldn't listen to it as it would double the present earnings of the train-men. The Council decided to sign the petition and forward it to the proper authorities.

Mr. Geo. D. McKay asked permission to have every other tree cut down in front of the Schwegler property.

Sec. A. Collins of the Public School Board asked the Council to provide for an election to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Trustee F. J. Fraser.

S. F. Ellinghausen and a long list of other ratepayers on McGiveron st., petitioned the Council to have street oil on the road between the Biscuit Factory and the G. T. R. Station.

Mr. Alex. George offered $25 for the Exhibition pasture for the coming summer.

Auditors W. A. Burrows and W. H. McBurney submitted their report.

Mr. C. B. Robinson, manager of the Bell Telephone Co. asked that the Council sign up its telephone contents for the coming year.

Mr. George Eckel and a number of other ratepayers petitioned the Council to lay a sewer on McGiverson St. from the House of Refuge to Baker's Corner and to Mr John Ermel's.

The estimates of the Public Library Board for 1918 were received, showing that with the full grant of $574.15 from the town, there would still be a small deficit this year.

The Finance Committee recommended the payment of a number of accounts. Consideration of the estimates of the Public Library Board was deferred until the Town Estimates come up in August. Recommended that nomination of election of P. S. Trustee to succeed the late F. J. Fraser be held on March 21st. and election if necessary on March 24th—Carried.

The Property Committee recommended that Alex. George's tenders for the Exhibition pasture for the coming year be fyled and tenders called for. That the Council order three new flags for the use of the town—Carried.

A by-law was passed providing for nomination of Public School Trustee for the West Ward on Thursday, March 21st, between 12 and 1 o'clock. If necessary an election is to be held on March 28th, polling at John Nielly's house.

Mayor Johnston said that as the Saddlery Hardware property was now the property of the town, an effort should be made to realize on the stock and machinery.

Coun. Truax said that a Mr. Clark of London, nephew of Mr. Harry Clark, dealt in that sort of thing and might be willing to handle it on commission for the town. The matter was left with Mr. Truax's committee.

Coun. Lettner suggested that as the old Exhibition Building is all going to rack, that an effort be made to dispose of the material in it before it is too far gone.

The Fire and Water Com. recommended that the Bell Telephone contract be deferred until the Com. could look into the matter, and that the Underwriters Association be written to to ascertain whether it is required to have fire phones in various parts of the town as at present.—Carried.

Railway Committee recommended that the petition drafted by D. Robertson be signed and forwarded.—Carried.

Coun. Pletsch asked what was going to be done about the Walker drain in the East Ward which has been causing so much trouble. It was agreed that before this matter be handled that an engineer be named. Several names of engineers were suggested but no action was taken.

WALKERTON, MARCH 14th, '18

EDITORIAL COMMENT

THE announcement that the Hydro Electric Power Commission will spend $9,000,000 in construction during 918, does not line up with the assurance which Walkerton Town Council received from the Commission last Fall that Walkerton would have to drop its hydro project for the present as no construction would be undertaken during war time. The Commission has millions to spend on power development at Chippewa but not one dollar to develops the water power of the Saugeen for the benefit of the people of Bruce. In our opinion the Town Council should get in close with the Hydro Commission and keep right on their track. Other municipalities such as Kincardine, Port Elgin, Southampton, Wingham and Teeswater who have much to gain from hydro development in this district should be got in touch with and their co-operation sought in getting hydro without unnecessary delay for this northern peninsula. The Saugeen offers great opportunities for power development. Why should the people of this district stand aside and allow all other parts of the province to take precedence?

SHARP criticism from the Opposition benches characterized the debate in the Legislature on the Government's Civil Service measure. The Liberals could not see that any great advance was being made under the bill in the abolition of patronage. The Liberal leader, Mr. Proudfoot, objected that decisions made by the Civil Service Commissioner could be over-ridden by the Government. He thought the commissioner should have a free hand, and appointments should be made through him after full investigations by him as to the merits of the case. Mr. Elliot, Mr. Dewart and Mr. Carter on the Liberal side took the same stand but the bill went forward another stage in its original form, and apparently all applicants for positions under the Government will have to be nominated by the party in power.

THE Government now has a majority of about seventy. Counting together the Laurier Liberals and the Unionist Liberals, there is a Liberal majority of about fifteen in the new house.

UP TO THE MERCHANT

Recently a merchant in a rural town happened to see a farmer receive a box at the depot and noticed it was from a mail order house. He also noticed that the goods were right in his line and the same he had carried for years. He immediately approached the farmer and said: "I could have sold you the goods you have here for less money than the mail order house and saved you the freight'. Then why don't you do so?" said the farmer, 'I have taken the local paper for a year and have not seen a line about you selling these or any other goods. 'This mail order house sends advertising for my trade and they get it. If you have any bargains, why don't you put them in the paper so we can see what they are'"

A-WALKERTON "SAMMY"

Now in Training Down in Georgia Writes an Interesting Account of Trip through Southern States to Training Ground Teeming with Historic Interest.

Camp Forrest, Ga.
March 4th, 1918.

Dear Friend Mr. Eedy:—

This letter is to serve a double purpose. First to inform you of my new address and request you to change it on your mailing sheet and secondly to reveal to you a few of my experiences since I had the opportunity and pleasure of speaking to you at Christmas.

There were of course many things that occurred since that time around Camp Sherman, besides our regular routine, for even though we were subjected to those severe snow storms and the extreme cold weather of January and February we wasted little time. Most of the time during those two months was spent shooting on the rifle range at Mt. Logan some seven miles distant from camp to and from which we walked each day we made a trip to the range. After the shooting course was completed we commenced the study of machine gunnery. But the most noteworthy experience effected me about a week ago and it is of this that I desire to write.

Often in my memorable school days while endeavouring to develop my intellect on the subject of geography, I would entertain a desire, aroused by the reading and studying of these Southern States, their remarkable climate and historical landmarks. That desire was none other than to be some day privileged with seeing and enjoying what I had read and heard of them. Like so many other things the war has done and is doing, it has afforded me that privilege. I believe it may interest you to have me relate a few of my impressions on what I have so far seen.

Perhaps a few words about my trip to this camp may add interest to the letter, so with your permission I will write a short account of it.

Some thirty of our 331st Machine Gun Co. or over 450 from the 331st Reg't. were notified of their transfer from Camp Sherman to Camp Forrest, Ga. Like all military orders are carried out, we too, had little time to prepare and on Friday morning, the 22nd, after a rousing send-off by our respective companies and a parade to the train led by the Regimental Band, we cast a farewell glance over those scenes. Little of importance did I notice on the trip as far as Cincinnatti, but one thing rather humorous was a sign I happened to see on passing through that city, which read, "This way to Sinners" and though I wasn't quite sure whether it would be best to desert the troop train and look after my spiritual welfare I decided in the negative,' and rather to take a chance by doing good works. On leaving that city we crossed the Ohio River, the boundary line of Ohio and Kentucky, and it's every bit as large as I so often heard it was. My interest was aroused on passing into a State, through which I would be making my initial trip. I was agreeably surprised though, for I was expecting to see a little more than a range of mountains and hills covered with woods. I can now understand why it was habituated so extensively by "moonshiners" in the early days. We passed through only two fair-sized places, Frankfort and Lexington, the remainder of the villages appearing about the size of Eden Grove. The farm houses and barns are also very small and like the villages, depicted pioneer style.

Our trip through Tennessee had a good deal of its interest lost through darkness intervening, and thus cannot enlighten you much as to what that Sunny State is like. I could distinguish an endless chain of mountains and a score or more of tunnels. We made only one stop in that State and that was at Somerset, where we managed to cop off a few pies and cakes to satisfy our craving appetites. On leaving that town I devised a fair resting place with two seat-cushions and indulged in a five-hour sleep. Arrived at Chattanooga at 6.30 a. m. and here a half hour later, making the trip from camp to camp, some seven hundred miles, in twenty hours. After detraining and being attached temporarily to the 11th Inf. Machine Gun Co. we were relieved of our baggage and dismissed. Naturally our first inclinations were to view our new environs and derive an idea of what our new training camp was like. So with what I have up to the present seen, I'm going to write a brief narration.

Recalling to your mind the history of the American Civil War will cause some of the names I am about to write of to sound very familiar, for it is here the greatest battles of that war were fought.

Chickamauga Park is the resting place of many heroes and the treasury for thousands of relics of the war. Throughout the entire park are erected monuments in dedication to the men and units that participated in those battles. Descriptive signs are also very numerous, giving a brief account of the fighting and combatant units. All this has proven very interesting to me. The park is in reality only the central portion of a large camp which includes in its 12,000 acres, three separate camps, viz. Camp Forrest, Camp Greenleaf and Fort Oglethorpe, which provide training quarters for over 40,000 troops. At Fort Oglethorpe there is also a detention camp where over 600 German spies are prisoners. Chattanooga, the nearest city, is about nine miles distant, to which we have access by means of taxis and street cars. It has a population of over 100,000 and is one of the attractive cities of the South being notable through the fact that Lookout Mountain and the Dixie Highway form a part of the cities assets. I'm sure you have heard plenty of both these, but even at that I can't refrain from adding a few words about Lookout mountain. A friend and I had the extreme pleasure of spending a furlough from Saturday noon until Monday morning at Chattanooga and the mountain. Most of Sunday was spent on the mountain over 2700 feet above sea level and I can't recollect ever seeing anything of a scenic nature so wonderful. An incline railway provides the means for scaling or reaching the top and while going up or down on one of the cars one imagines the cars are resting on one end instead of on the bottom. Would enjoy telling you about all we saw from the mountain but that would run the letter into extremes. This much though, with the aid of glasses one can look into five of the neighboring States. It's most picturesque to gaze down on the Valley of Tennessee, the river and the city of Chattanooga. The one mysterious thing to me is how the Confederates ever got their forces to the point of the mountain and fought the "Great Battle of the Clouds," so much is written of. The only way to appreciate these wonderful scenes is to see them.

Just a few words more about this camp. Though the buildings and layout are somewhat in contrast to Camp Sherman they are equally as comfortable and convenient, so am missing nothing in that way. We have the canteens, Y. M. C. A. halls, K. of C. halls, library and about six good-sized theatres, so our leisure hours are well taken care of. The weather is like you people experience there in the month of June. The past few days we have had 80 degrees in the shade, and I can't imagine this as only the month of March. We never think of wearing coats and are outdoors a good deal of the time playing baseball and football. Most of us have been assigned to the 15th Machine Gun Batt., a part of the 10th brigade which is in the regular army division. We are receiving more advanced training. And of course have many rumours going the rounds as to just how soon this brigade will go Overseas.

To-day we had a division review before the General and a French officer in which over 30,000 troops took part.

I would enjoy writing you more had I the time. Trust what I have written interests you, and assures you I still have recollection of you people, the Telescope and the Staff and all the people thereabouts. Only wish I could call around to the office and view the old scenes

I am in very good health and spirits. With best wishes to Mrs. Eedy and yourself, also the Telescope and Staff and all my good old friends.

I am ever your friend,

Art Schnurr.

P. S —I always anxiously await the arrival of the "Telescope" so be sure and address it to Exhausted On Road.

An aged citizen of Hanover was seen tramping back and forward in aimless fashion on the Durham Road one day last week. He was in a dazed condition and told a farmer that he was bound for Hanover but as he didn't seem to be making progress in that direction the farmer phoned into Hanover and had the old man's relatives drive out and get him. It appears that the aged gentleman, who is in his 87th year drove over to Walkerton in the morning with a party who was negotiating with him to buy a bit of property here. After completing his business, the old man apparently started to walk home to Hanover. But before he got half way over his six mile course, he was so done out that his senses became confused. He would have died on the road if somebody hadn't come to his assistance.

Had Exciting Experience

Mr. H. M. Lay had a visit the past week from a brother-in-law Mr. George Spence of Kobe, Japan. Mr. Spence is manager of a large merchantile company in the Orient and has been in the United States on business. From New York he crossed the Atlantic recently to visit friends in the Old Land and had quite an experience. They were almost in sight of England when a German submarine gave chase. It was early in the morning and Mr. Spence was awakened in his cabin by the firing of the gun on board. The passengers were soon up but were paraded along the passage way below, while the ship's gunmen had it out with the submersible. It was not until sixteen shots had been fired from a big six inch gun that the sub gave up the chase and the liner sailed into port safely.

Sun Life of Canada in Strong Position

As will be seen from the essential features of its year's operations set forth elsewhere in this issue, Canada's largest life assurance company has just closed a highly satisfactory year. Total assurances in force on the books of the Sun Life of Canada have now crossed the $311,000,000 mark, assurances issued and paid for in cash during the year totalling over $47,000,000, the largest amount ever issued by a Canadian life company. During the year the Sun Life of Canada paid policyholders, in death claims, matured endowments, profits, etc. the sum of $ 8,840,246, bringing the total payments to policy holders since organization to over $69,000,000. Other features which are worthy of note are an increase of over $7,000,000, in assets, which now stand at $30,000,000 in round figures, and a net surplus over all liabilities, including capital, which now totals over $ 9,550,000. Altogether, such a showing will be gratifying to the Company's many policyholders and indicates that this conservatively managed Company is in an even stronger position to-day than at any time in its history. The Company's Head Office is now installed in the fine new Sun Life Building recently erected on Dominion Square, Montreal, where the adoption of the most up-to-date office equipment should result in still greater efficiency in the administration of its large business.

A Truck for the Farmer

FARM equipment which will effect a time and labor-saving, and therefore a money-saving, must be carefully considered by every good farmer now-a-days.

The farm wagon, which for years was the most useful of all farm equipment, is now being replaced on the best farms by a sturdy, dependable motor truck. The truck will haul any farm product—fruit, grain, vegetables, stock, fertilizer, or wood—around the farm, or to the town or city many miles distant, in half the time, and at a much lower cost.

The Ford One-Ton truck is a rapid, economical and very serviceable means of transport. One of these on your farm will save you weeks of time in a sirigle season and will enable you to pass through a crisis of labor shortage with less difficulty.

The Ford truck is supplied as a chassis only. This permits you to select any of the many body styles especially designed for the Ford truck and already on the market. Thus you can mount the one which suits your individual requirements.

A WALKERTON OFFICER

Major Arthur McConnell Tells Graphic Story of the Canadian Tommies' Work in Flanders—Praises the Work of Y. M. C. A.

A crowd that taxed the seating capacity of the Methodist school room heard one of the best war talks yet given here on Sunday night after service by a Walkerton Soldier who has won distinction on the fighting Front in the person of Major Arthur McConnell. The affair was given under the auspices of the Epworth League but many people from the various congregations of the town were present. At the conclusion of the address a collection was taken up on behalf of the Overseas work of the Y. M. C. A.

Major McConnell, who is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Oliver McConnell, Walkerton, went Overseas in 1914, and although scarcely in his thirties he soon rose to a very responsible post, being in command of a full battalion in some of the fights on the West Front in which the Canadians won imperishable fame.

Major McConnell is a fluent speaker with an unaffected style. In a speech that was full of interesting information, he gave his audience a graphic picture of some of the work that the boys at the Front are doing. Major McConnell resented very strongly the libellous statements that were made on the platform in Toronto last week. He believed that it was impossible to get together any place in the world a body of men who were cleaner morally in their way of living than the men of the Canadian Expeditionary Forces. The men worked under the hardest conditions, in wet and cold, and yet in his experience of ten months in the trenches, he only knew of possibly a dozen cases of drunkenness. The Tommies lived the vigorous out door life which makes for good morals. You could not expect the fellows who were rough ones at home would be angels in the trenches and yet many of these same fellows, who had not been all they should before the War, had shown themselves heroes and had faced death unflinchingly. All "shows" according to the Major, are the same. He told how at Vimy and Paschendaele the Canadians walked forward under a storm of shrapnel which meant almost certain death. When he took his battalion forward to reinforce three battalions at Paschendaele in one of themonly 8 men were left, but they had taken the line and were holding it. In the next battalion to it only 50 survived. The officer's job is no sinecure, as some newspapers give the impression. There are 50 men to each officer, but the casuality lists show 1 officer to ten men.

The villages along the battle front, are indescribable. Every building is flat on the ground, even the cellars destroyed. The ground everywhere is a mass of shell holes and is stirred up by the exploding shells as if it were putty. This was formerly a very rich agricultural section. To-day nothing even of fields remain. Major McConnell paid a high tribute to the work of the Y. M. C. A. at the Front. This organization which is non-secterian, serves Catholics, Presbyterians, Methodists and all denominations alike. The entertainments it provides give the Tommies just the necessary change and recreation. Coming out of the trenches in a used-up condition the sand-bagged Hut of the Y. M. C. A. right behind the firing lines, offers the soldier a hot drink which gives him a different outlook on the world. Every dollar contributed to this organization goes a long way.

Rev. Dr. Scanlon of Port Elgin, whose only two boys went to the Front, one of whom now occupies a grave in Flanders, said he had kept in closest touch with the war from the beginning and agreed with every word which the speaker had said.

Mr. W. G. Cheshire, President of the Epworth League, who presided, thanked Major McConnell on behalf of the League and the audience for his very excellent address.

Home in Halifax roofed with Brantford Asphalt Slates

A handsome roof that defies the weather

An added touch of beauty to any house is a roof of Brantford Asphalt Slates, which are in soft, harmonious shades of reddish brown and dark green. The colors are permanent and unfadeable, being the natural shades of the slate just as it is taken out of the quarries.

It will also prove a very economical roof, because Brantford Asphalt Slates do not split, get loose, absorb water or rot. They are strongly fire-resistant and are classified as non-combustible by the fire insurance companies and allowed to be used in cities where the most rigid fire-prevention By-Laws are in force.

Brantford Asphalt Slates are very moderate in cost. The regular size of the slates and their pliability make them easily and quickly laid, thus saving time and cost of labor. Being made of high grade felt saturated and coated with asphalt, and with a surface of crushed slate, they make a roof that defies the elements and is a permanent part of the building, just like the walls and the foundation.

Brantford Asphalt Slates

are being used more extensively every year for city, country and summer homes, churches, golf clubs, stores, garages, and wherever an artistic effect is desired on a pitch roof.

If you are going to do any building this year or have an old roof that needs replacing, it will be to your advantage to investigate Brantford Asphalt Slates.

Aunt Sally's Letter

To the Readers of The Walkerton Telescope

Dear Friends:—

Just a week from to-day is the first day of Spring. All the earth will soon adorn itself in a beautiful new dress and we feel that we must have a new dress too. Here is a little advance news of styles for Spring that our energetic shop-keepers have secured from Dame Fashion.

MILLINERY

When will we have Millinery Opening? I just felt curious so persuaded the milliners to give me a little idea of what we were going to have.

Sailor hats are to be worn this Spring and there are many popular styles, the mushroom hat, the Chin Chin sailor and a new style mannish sailor that makes us think of business, that but simply spells efficiency. All sorts of pretty sailors ranging in price from $2 to $4.

Something different can be looked for in the dress hats this Spring. Some of the names sound interesting, the Bustle Hat, the Becoming Poke, and the Patent Leather.

SPRING COATS

The separate coats are very popular this Spring and they are very serviceable. I saw a very stylish coat in one of the town shops that appealed to me so I am going to tell you about it. It is made of suede finished all-wool velour and is trimmed with saddle stitching on collar and cuffs. It has a belt of the right width, a self covered buckle at the back. The beauty of this coat is its simplicity and elegant style, the material is the finest of this Spring's fashionable coating and the buttons are large and attractive. The price of this coat is $22.00.

WAISTS

We always look for an attractive waist in the Spring. The waists are numerous and of various prices. Here is one that is not so high priced and is very attractive and stylish. It is made of Habitai silk which is an excellent wash silk. It has a large square collar, long sleeves with pointed turned back cuff and is daintily trimmed with hem-stitching. There are two colors, maize and white. The price of this waist is $3.00.

SHOES

The most noticeable thing about the new Spring shoes is the high top and the high price. But I have been looking around and have found a stylish shoe with a high top that is not high priced. This shoe is one of the latest Spring styles and the top measures 7½ inches from the ground. It is made of fine Dongola kid, has a plain vamp and can be had with either French or low heels for $5. The same style shoe can be had with a cloth top for $4.

If you do not know in which store you can find any of these articles, I will be glad to send you the name of the store on request.

Faithfully yours,
Aunt Sally,
Walkerton Telescope,
Walkerton,
Ontario.

CARD OF THANKS

Mr. John Stemler wishes to express his thanks to his friends and neighbors of the 6th con. Brant for their kindness in assisting him in moving his household goods to G. T. R. depot also for kindness shown himself and wife while they lived there.

TOWN COUNCIL MINUTES

$3,000,000 was to be spent on Hydro extension the coming year. Was Walkerton going to get a piece of that?

Coun. Lippert thought the Council should get in touch with the members of the Commission right away. The Council would never get anything unless it kept knocking at the door. The street-lighting contract expired in July. The Commission should advise the town and tell them where they are at. The Town didn't want to have any long contracts.

Mayor Johnston said that if a suitable arrangement couldn't be made the town could get along without street lights if necessary for a while.

Coun. George said that the Saugeen furnished the steadiest flow of water in Western Ontario and he didn't see why the Commission had to spend all its money in developing Chippawa.

SCOUTS, "ALERT"!

As the boys who have been making anxious inquiries regarding the proposed Troup of Boy Scouts I am very sorry to see so few that have shown their wish to join up.

I believe there are boys who are simply waiting for a troop to start and others in the country round about but at present 7 boys over twelve 12 yrs. and 14 boys under 12 yrs. have signed the forms at Mr. Searle's.

I could not think of starting a troop unless I had 20 boys over 12 yrs. for the "Wolf Cubs". The only difficulty would be to have vacancies for them as I intimated last week that "The Wolf Cubs" are affiliated with the Scouts and a pack cannot be formed unless there is a Scout Troop. I wish to thank those boys who signed up and trust in the future a troop will be formed that they may achieve their ambition. I thank Mr. Searle for his kindness in doing a good turn by showing his interest in the boys of Walkerton also our kind friends the Editors of the Walkerton papers who were both very much interested in the movement.

If at any time I can be of any assistance either in organizing a troop or helping as instructor I shall be delighted to do all I can to push along this good work.

There seems to be nothing doing here at present much to my regret.

Yours Sincerely,
"The Old Wolfe"

Mr. George Lambertus of Teeswater, a nephew of Messrs John and George Lambertus, passed away on Monday morning after a lingering illness. Besides his widow he leaves a family of three children.

Visit From "Scotty" Hanna

Sergt.-Major A. McD. Hanna, who recently returned from France, called on a few old friends in town yesterday. "Scotty" was for many years brakesman on the G. T. R. on the Southampton line and has many friends here. Before leaving France he spent some time with his old chum, Sergt. Jack Clancy and his visit yesterday was to see Jack's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Clancy of Cargill, and brother, G. T. R. Agent Jim Clancy. Sergt. Hanna says that he left Jack in France fine and fit and in the best of spirits. On his way back he visited Bramshott and Witley Camps and saw many of the Walkerton boys. "Scotty" is an old South African Veteran and he enlisted way back in July 1915. He went over with the 75th. the only Toronto Batt'n that has gone through intact although it has taken 6,000 reinforcements to keep the ranks filled. He left a family of ten children to enlist and a sad experience was the death of his wife five days before he sailed. A young son, who enlisted earlier than he, has been wounded three times and is now in England. Sergt. Hanna will get his discharge in a few days and his old employers, the Grand Trunk, have given him a good run out of Toronto.

Pte. Norman Kilbourne of the 5th Calgary, who lost his right leg at Vimy ridge, arrived home at Wiarton Monday. He enlisted at Regina. Three of his brothers are still in France.

Mr. and Mrs. George Sawyer and family, and Mrs. Colin Mori, who have been spending the winter with relatives at Flokerton, leave to-day for their homes at Hartney, Man. Mr. Sawyer intends removing to Sawyer, Sask. where his father, Mr. George Sawyer, after whom the place is named, has been farming for a number of years.

Collins—Hawthorne

The marriage was quietly solemnized on Friday March 8th, 1918, at the home of the bride's parents in Greenock of Myrtle Edna, third daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Hawthorne, to Gordon Lewe Collins of Toronto. The bride who carried a bequet of bridal roses was given away by her father while her sister, Mrs. J. A. Cunningham, played the wedding march. The ceremony was performed by Rev. J. W. Sanderson of Walkerton after which a very dainty dinner was served. The happy couple left the following day to reside in Toronto where Mr. Collins has a lucrative situation.

An Odd Freak

While cutting wood on his farm on con. 6, Carrick, Mr. Alex Becker, son of Mr. Adam Becker, of Walkerton, came across a strange phenomenon. In a cross section of a maple tree he noticed seven letters of the alphabet in the heart of the wood just as plain as newspaper print. The letters are about two inches across and are in a lighter color as if composed of another kind of wood. They do not form any word, at least not in our language, and it is certainly a mystery how they grew there. Mr. Becker has kept the block of wood and is showing it to his friends as an odd curiosity.

A Good Response

The ladies of Walkerton W. C. T. U wish to express their gratitude to the people for the splendid response to their appeal for trinkets etc. One box has been sent in valued at $32.60 Twenty-five dollars was collected in cash instead of trinkets, $16.25 for Trinket Fund from the Epworth League being the proceeds of Major McConnel's lecture. More trinkets are still coming in and as house-cleaning is near, will the ladies please save all trinkets, brass and such like and lay them aside and another collection will be made later.

Signed on behalf of the committee:
Mrs. Rife, Mrs. Warren, Mrs. Greenoch.

Works Out Poorly

It is believed here that the curtailed train service on the G. T. R. is only a temporary arrangement. That no new employees' timetables have been issued showing the change, and that the train schedule has not been slowed down to allow for the extra handling of express and baggage, are straws that seem to indicate the arrangement will have a short shift. Certainly if the new schedule outlasts the snow drifts and the acute freight shortage the public will be up in arms, for the present service provides the minimum of service and the maximum of inconvenience. The train arriving an hour later each day means that the farmers don't get Monday morning's mail until Tuesday afternoon. Business firms are unable to answer important letters the same day as received. In fact stage-coach days could show some advantages in the transportation line. Trains from the South empty their passengers and baggage into Palmerston twice a day with no outlet and many employees who make their homes at the northern terminal towns cannot live at home and have to board at Palmerston. While people are ready to put up with war-time inconveniences, it is felt that the North Country has been discriminated against in the new schedule. While time-tables have been cut down all over the country, the curtailment elsewhere has not been so severe as up here.

Strange Birds Identified.

The last few days the trees in the Public School grounds have been thronged with a flock of small birds which ate the red berries and scattered the seeds on the ground until the snow was completely covered. The birds are an unfamiliar species, a bit smaller than the sparrow but with a sweet twitter like that of the canary. Many citizens have noticed the birds but were unable to name them. A South Ward lady who has studied birds has identified them as the red poll. They are a northern bird and in winter time may often be found gathering seeds from weeds by the roadside and stone walks. The male has a rosy breast, the female without. Their actions greatly resemble those of our goldfinch but their flight is more rapid and not so undulatory.

EDEN GROVE

History, both ancient and modern, has told to the world the greatness of certain outstanding characters. Frederick the Great tried to conquer the world. Napoleon almost succeeded. The Kaiser is trying to-day. This type of man passeth away and leaveth behind a record that is foul and putrid, that stinks of cruelty, inhumanity and lust. Their method was war. Biblical history however speaks of one who conquered the world by Love and, leaving left a record of comfort, hope and joy to all mankind. It is a disciple of the latter warrior I would describe. In recent times one country, one county, one man stands forth prominently overshadowing all others. Which is this country? Canada, of course. Which is the county? Bruce, just as much of course. Who is who in Bruce? It is unnecessary to mention—you know. What is the name of the man who stands prominent above his fellowmen? It is needless to answered—you know it. It is of this man, beloved of the fairest county in Canada I would write. A descendent of Sir Walter on his father's side and of his father's wife on his mother's side, Mac. Scott, justly proud of his lineages but modest withal stands supreme as the best loved man in Eden Grove to-day. Long, lean and lanky like a boy on stilts with a thin reddish face in which showed business ability and general debility is clearly written, he has raised himself from a bald baby to the proud position of power he holds to-day. Born (though there is some doubt about this) in Brant about forty-five years ago without clothes, to-day he has a week day suit, a Sunday suit and a law suit. 2 yrs ago he ran a threshing machine. One year ago he was head sawyer for J. J. Donnelly. One month ago he was a scaler for the Knechtel Furn. Co. Two weeks later he was appointed on genuine merit, postmaster. To-day while he retains his postmastership and his position as scaler, he owns and operates the largest departmental store in our city. Such a record would turn the head of many a sober hard-headed business man but not so Mac. He simply smiles in his quiet unassuming kindly manner and with dynamic force proceeds to force his way up and up and up. The County of Bruce from end to end, men, women and children are now thronging his store for bargains—Pallbearers gloves 10 cts., seedless figs, while they last, 10 cts. a pound, hairless wig at half price, liquorless liquorice free. We hope and trust that the good people of Eden Grove and vicinity as far east as Halifax and as far west as Vancouver will deal where the quality is high, the price low, the service excellent and a square deal assured—in other words will become patrons of our leading merchant—our longest resident and well beloved citizen—Mac. Scott.

It is only fitting that a few words be spoken concerning the passing away of our late beloved merchant, Alex McKeeman. Do not mistake us. He is not dead in the usual sense. He is merely passing away to the West with a car of horses if possible. Though short in stature, he was ever short in cash or affability. After nine years in business here, during which time he was a good Samaritan feeding the hungry, clothing the naked and generously supporting the church, we will miss him greatly. Some who owe him a little account have managed to miss him already. We wish him unlimited success in the great and glorious West.

AUTO-INTOXICATION OR SELF-POISONING

"FRUIT-A-TIVES" Absolutely Prevents This Dangerous Condition.

The chief cause of poor health is our neglect of the bowels. Waste matter, instead of passing from the lower intestine regularly every day, is allowed to remain there, generating poisons which are absorbed by the blood.

In other words, a person who is habitually constipated, is poisoning himself. We know now that Auto-intoxication, due to non-action of the bowels, is directly responsible for serious Kidney and Bladder Troubles; that it upsets the Stomach, causes Indigestion, Loss of Appetite and Sleeplessness; that chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Pain In The Back, are relieved as soon as the bowels become regular; and that Pimples, Rashes, Eczema and other Skin Affections disappear when "Fruit-a-tives" are taken to correct Constipation.

"Fruit-a-tives" will protect you against Auto-intoxication because this wonderful fruit medicine acts directly on all the eliminating organs. 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size 25c. At all dealers or sent on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

Sir Edmund Allenby, "The Hero of Jerusalem," Has Had Notable Career

THIS is the psychological moment for some genealogical sharp to produce an authenticated family tree of Lieutenant General Sir Edmund Henry Hyman Allenby, K.C.B., latest conqueror of Jerusalem. To fit the romance of the occasion it should date back at least as far as the crusades and should show that one of General Allenby's ancestors stood beside Richard Coeur de Lion on one or both of the two occasions when that doughty but unlucky warrior-monarch viewed from afar the walls of the coveted city which he was destined never to enter.

Allenby, is a name with a Norman ring to it, and it is possible that one of Sir Edmund's forbears did actually 'squire the impetuous Richard Yea-and-Nay, but the modern conqueror is too recent a figure in the war limelight for any biographer to have yet dug up such interesting facts. For the present General Allenby will have to be content with the honors that he has won for himself—and these seem ample. Of his ancestry the world knows only that he is not the descendant of a hundred belted earls, but merely comes from what the English are given to calling a "good family." All that he has achieved in the profession of arms has been through his own ability and by his own efforts.

As military ages go in these modern wartimes, General Allenby is not a young officer. Born April 23, 1861, he had passed the age when military geniuses of history gained their greatest laurels long before his name was known outside British army circles. As a matter of fact, probably no one would be more astonished than Sir Edmund himself if, because of his success in Palestine, the world should now acclaim him a military genius. All he has ever pretended to be or just what he was called at the Horse Guards when the war began and a very responsible duty was thrust upon him—a good officer, one who executes a task, whether easy or difficult, with as little fuss and in as short a time as possible.

He was a good officer when, upon leaving Hailerbury College, an excellent but unrenowned English secondary school, he entered the Enniskilling Dragoons as a subaltern. He was a good officer, his superiors said, when he served in the Bechuanaland expedition in 1884-85. He was a good enough officer to be made adjutant of his famous regiment in 1889, and so good an officer in the Boer War that he was twice mentioned in dispatches and rewarded for his services by being made a Companion of the Bath. Later, as commander of the Fifth Cavalry Brigade, 1910, he continued to merit the trust and confidence of his superiors. "Allenby is dependable," they said at the Horse Guards. "A good officer," every one agrees.

It is little wonder, therefore, that in the dark hours of 1914 the British War Office, seeking a good officer to take command of the cavalry expeditionary force, that forlorn hope that was to grapple with von Kluck's Uhlans, turned to Brigadier-General Allenby. No small part of the credit that is now freely given Britain's "contemptible little army" for the part it played at Mons belonged to Allenby and his troopers. It was, however, at best a losing fight, though glorious in its gallant stubbornness, and the world is always inclined to withhold from losers the garlands it lavishes upon those who actually achieve victories.

We know how that General Allenby, as commander of the Third British Army, continued to prove himself a good officer on the west front during 1916, particularly in the battle of Arras, that began on Easter Sunday of that year. That the British gains in that action were not commensurate with the losses suffered was probably not his fault. That was British strategy then. But until he was transferred to the command of the British forces in Egypt in June last Allenby's name was as wholly unfamiliar as that of Byng itself.

That Sir Edmund is a cavalry officer by preference and by training should occasion no surprise. So far as the British army is concerned, this is a war in which the cavalry has had little to do, but in which cavalry leaders nevertheless have won distinction. Haig himself is a cavalryman, and so was his predecessor, the less aggressive Viscount French. Byng, the man who set things popping at Cambrai as they had not popped since the German Crown Prince sought the glory due a future Emperor at Verdun, had always been in the cavalry arm of the service before the big war, and for some time after it began. Since cavalry officers have made good in the trench fighting in France and Flanders, small wonder was it that one should have been chosen for the command in Egypt, where bodies of horses could be used to advantage.

Things had not gone well for the British in Egypt in the early days of the war. It will be recalled how in November, 1914, a Turkish army got within striking distance of the Suez Canal. The Anzacs had their hands full in defending the great waterway, but by December, 1915, the tide had turned and the Turks had been driven back as far as El Arish, 55 miles east of the canal. Then followed a lull of six months; then another Turkish advance, which met with a decisive defeat. The British had driven the Ottomans across the border into Palestine before Allenby's arrival at the front. It was that he found affairs in better [illegible] though [illegible] from [illegible] had [illegible] took command. An advance upon Jerusalem had reached a point only about fifteen miles south of that city, while along the coast another column had gone as far as Gaza; but there the campaign lagged until new life was infused into it by the good officer from the western front. Since November, when he struck north, he has taken Beersheba, then Gaza, afterward Jaffa, and now Jerusalem—pretty good evidence of efficiency and enterprise.

Now that General Allenby has once more proved himself a good officer by winning Jerusalem for the British and for Christianity, the question arises: How much real importance should be attached to his success. From a purely sentimental point of view the fall of the shrine of Christendom looms big. Doubtless it has much political value also; even the German press admitted this when the capture of the city was announced.

In the minds of many persons Allenby's drive into the Holy land is associated more or less directly with the progress of that other British expedition up the valley of the Tigris beyond Bagdad. The prospect of there being any co-operation between these two forces is to be considered. From Jerusalem to Bagdad is more than 400 miles as the crow flies, supposing that any crow would have the temerity to cross the Syrian desert without carrying a commissariat. Should Allenby push further along the coast it is barely possible that the Mesopotamian expedition might endeavor to strike westward and form a junction with him.

Even as it is, the Turks, relieved of the fear of invasion through the Caucasus, may yet decide to throw a far larger force into Syria and Palestine than they have hitherto had there. To Turkish eyes Mecca and Medina are prizes worth having and keeping. In that case Allenby may be called upon to fight harder than he has fought before to retain his conquests. But his British friends and admirers will remain confident that whatever further problems he may have to meet he will continue to prove himself a good officer.

WAS NATURAL POET.

Paragraphs From Dickens Read Like Blank Verse.

Thousands of admirers of Charles Dickens can perhaps recall passages —particularly in scenes where pathos was required—which, as they read them, had all the charm of poetry. Few persons, however, I venture to believe, ever realised that in reading them they were actually perusing blank verse. Printed in the form of prose, these examples of descriptive work did not reveal their rightful claim to be considered poetry.

It is quite possible, indeed probable, that the wording of such passages was the result of harmonious accident, and that Dickens himself, neither realized nor became conscious later that he was writing blank verse of irregular meter and rhythm, such as Southey and Shelley and some other poets occasionally adopted.

But look now at the following description of "Little Nell's funeral, taken from "The Old Curiosity Shop," when merely reset in the familiar form of blank verse:

And now the bell—the bell
She had often heard by night and day
And listened to with solid pleasure.
Seen as a living voice—
Rung in its remorseless toll for her,
So young, so beautiful, so good.
Decrepit age, and vigorous life,
And blooming youth, and helpless infancy—
Poured forth—on crutches, in the pride of strength,
And health, in the full blush
Of promise—the mere dawn of life—
To gather round her tomb. Old men were there
Whose eyes were dim
And senses failing—
Granddames, who might have died ten years ago,
And still been old—the deaf, the blind, the lame,
The palsied,
The living dead in many shapes and forms,
To see the closing of this early grave!
What was the death it would shut in,
To that which still would crawl and creep above it!
Along the crowded path they bore her now.
Pale as the new-fallen snow
That covered it; whose day on earth
Had been so fleeting.
Under that porch where she had sat
when heaven
In mercy brought her to that peaceful spot,
She paused again, and the old church
Received her in its quiet shade.

The above is a literal transcription from the novel, with the exception that two unimportant words — "in" and "the" are omitted, and that the word "granddames" is substituted for "grandmothers," and the word "even" for "almost." All the rest is exactly as in the original, not a single word transposed, and the punctuation the same to a comma.

And, again, if we reset the concluding paragraph of "Nicholas Nickelby" we get the following lovely bit of blank verse:

The grass was green above the dead boy's grave,
Trodden by feet so small and light
That not a daisy drooped its head
Beneath their pressure.
Through all the spring and summer time
Garlands of fresh flowers, wreathed by infants' hands,
Rested upon the stone.

The First Coffee House.

The first coffee-house really deserving to bear that name, which was opened in the metropolis, was established in 1652 by Pasqua, in Newman's Court, Cornhill. Pasqua, a Greek, was servant to Mr. Edwards, a Turkey merchant, and the taste for the new beverage increased so rapidly that coffee-houses became common in London at the date of the Restoration of Charles the Second. It is recorded in "Evelyn's Diary," on May 10th, 1637, that "there came in that year to the College of Balliol, in Oxford, one Nathaniel Conopius, out of Greece, who was the first that ever I saw drink [illegible]

They knew brothers and sisters, Mary's oth children of whom He was the fir born (Ps. 69-8; Lu. 2:7). posed that He was like th dinary human parentage, ing or not believing the His birth (Matt. 1:20, 2 unbelief, at which He mar dered Him from doing works among them excep few sick folk (4-6); round about among teaching. If some will others will, and there an open door somewh whom He sends forth We saw in a former le called unto Him twelve might be with Him, and might send them forth (3-14. and now we see him sending them forth, by two and two, to teach healin His name (7-13). They were not to go to the Gentiles or Samaritans, but only to Israel; and proclaim the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand, healing the sick, cleansing the lepers, raising the dead, casting out demons, and doing all freely (Matt. 10: 5-7). The Kingdom must be, with Israel, and will begin there when it shall be set up at His return. Because Israel rejected Him and His Kingdom, the gospel is, for this age of his rejection, and a postponed kingdom, to be purchased among the nations to take out of them a people for his name, the Church which is His body and bride; and then shall Israel be saved and then all nations (Acts 15: 14-18).

Inasmuch as human hearts are always the same, enmity against (Rom. 8:7, 8), we may still ex much of the same treatment the twelve were told they would (Matt. 10: 16-25), and must be content to be as sheep midst of wolves, for His sake all the day long. When the operations, now under way at the Hydro Power plant at Eugenia Falls are completed, the capacity of the plant will have been at least doubled—that is to say that while the plant is at present developing about 2,000 horse-power, the additional water wheels and dynamos will increase this to approximatively 6,000 horse power. The increased development is expected to result in a lowering of the cost to the consumer and a decided tendency to increase the amount of electricity in general use as a motive power. It is expected that the improvement will be completed this year.

Where Was the Hat.

A ranchman coming out of ether in a hospital ward after an operation exclaimed audibly: "Thank God! That is over! "Don't be so sure" said the man in the next cot. "They left a sponge in me and had to cut me open again." And the fellow on the other side said: "Why, they had to open me too, to find one of their instruments." Just then the surgeon stuck his head in the door and yelled: "Has anybody seen my hat?"

This is the next best thing to Church Union and will liberate ministers for work on the home and foreign mission fields. We wish the movement abundant success.—Chesley Enterprise.

Mistook The Word

The Sarnia Canadian says: "There is a joke going the rounds at the expense of a modest young newspaper man in a neighboring town, which is so good that it ought to be true. The young man in question it appears, was recently invited to a party at a residence where the home had lately been blessed with an addition to the family. Accompanied by his best girl he met the kind hostess at the door, and after the customary salutation, asked after the welfare of the baby. The lady was suffering from a cold which made her deaf, and she mistakingly supposed that the young man was inquiring after about her cold. She replied that though she usually had one every winter, this was the worst one she had ever had; it kept her awake at night at first and confined her to her bed. Then noticing that the scribe was getting pale and nervous, she said that she could tell by his looks that he was going to have one just like hers, and she asked him to go and lie down. The paper came out as usual the next week, but the editor has given up enquiring for babies."

One of a family of fourteen pigs which were littered at Gordon Ritchie's of Greenock last week, showed a strange freak of nature. The freak pig did not live but its thirteen young brothers and sisters who were favored with the ordinary number of hoofs and tails are thriving and very much alive.

Bull Got Loose

Some bills of goods marked short came into the hands of the Canadian express agent one evening last week. The reason for the goods being short or damaged was most unusual, it being stated that the destruction had been wrought by a bull. Behind this is quite an interesting story of the misbehavior of a male bovine some six or eight months old which was enroute from down east to Dantroon. The animal was apparently securely crated and had made the first stages of the journey without showing any refractory tendencies. But on the final stretch he became restive and soon the lumber in the crate commenced to creak. The boards and wire nails provided were not secure against the brute strength of this animal and soon he was at liberty, or partial liberty, in the car. The messenger was unable to control the bull and had to hustle out for assistance from among the train crew and the mail car. Meanwhile the bull had been giving expression to a decided dislike for cut flowers and some boxes containing greenhouse products were the chief objects of attack. When sufficient help was gathered in the express car the bull was put back in what was left of his crate and so tethered that it would be impossible for him to give further trouble so long as he was in the custody of the express messenger.—Alliston Herald.

The Hired Man's Dream

A Caledon farmer nearly cremated his trusty hired man one night last week. A little house cleaning had been done and the battery of the farmer's car was placed under the hired man's bed. When he was about to be poked by a fork he awoke and for a moment it was sure Hell, for the bed clothing was afire. Fortunately he escaped being severely burned, but after this no more batteries will be placed under beds in that homestead. The cause of the blaze is said to have started from the wire springs coming in contact with the battery and the fire started.

Fraud By Cable.

Mr. Jacob Miller of Kinloss was recently swindled out of $25 by a cable sent by some fraudulent person in England who signed the name of son son. The Lucknow Sentinel states that the crook first cabled for $25, and this Mr. Miller sent. This evidently looked like easy money and soon after there came another message asking for $35, and stating that Pte. Miller was in trouble. This message created suspicion and the money was not sent, and later investigation proved that Pte. Miller not only was not involved in any trouble, but he never was in the town where the fraudulent message said he was in trouble. Later a third request came, this time for $50, and this was accompanied by the statement that he was about to leave for France. This being disregarded a fourth distress call came asking for $100. The signature was each time different "J. Herb Miller" H. J Miller and so on, but each time different from that invariably used by Pte. Miller. The crook evidently was feeling about to see if he would strike the right arrangement.

Pte. Miller's letter to the folk at home was in part as follows: " You asked me in your last letter if I received the money which you thought I cabled for. I did not receive any money and I never sent for any. I am in no need of money. Some crook used my name and number. I sure would like to get hold of the fellow who cabled for $100 from London stating I was in trouble. I never was in any trouble. By the date of the cable, I was in the trenches in France when it was sent. I am getting on O. K. and will soon be well again.

GREENOCK BOY WRITES

Of the Work of the Canadians in Flanders—Nothing too Hard for the Boys to Attempt and Carry out

Mrs. J. Hodgkinson of Cliversdale had the following splendid letter from her son Stanley last week. It was written while he was on leave in England. Stanley's address is No. 907,358, 20th Batt'n B. E. F., Army P. O. France.

England, Feb. 7th 1918

Dear Mother:—

Received your parcel with shoepacks the day before I come over on leave. They are jake with two pairs of socks in them. Well, this is the same country raining all the time. Well I am due back in France on the 18th of this month. France is a much better climate than England, but it is not so healthy owing to so much shrapnel and shells flying around. We had an exciting time the last time I was in the line. Just about the time we were being relieved, the old boy started shelling our headquarters and then put a barrage on the Front line and a new officer got his wind up, for he thought they were coming over on us so he shoots up an S. O S. and our artillery started and pounded his front line so he thought we were coming over and started shelling his own front line so it wasn't very comfortable in his front line for a while at least. I suppose you know I was at Paschendaele. Well, it was fierce up there. We had no protection from shells or bombs or anything else, and if a man got off the trench mats which were on top he would be going down in mud yet. It was the worst battle-field I have ever seen. But we are not up there now. We are now on the Vimy front. It also has been a bad one, but is pretty quiet now. I saw in one of the papers the other day that the Canadians were very anxious for Fritz to come over on them. Well, I do not know where they get all the information as any I have ever seen are content to let well enough alone. If there is any hard nut to be cracked the Canadian Corps have to crack it. When some big Imperial general wants promotion or decoration, he gets hold of a nut, and says if he had the Canadian Corps he could crack it. That is about it. We can do the cracking and they all know it and believe me Fritz is just about as scared of us as he can be. The Canadians have made a name for themselves that they cannot lose. For proof of this statement all you have to do is to ask a German prisoner.

Well, mother, I guess this is all. I will try and get another chance to write before going back.

SERGT. GEO. KINGSBURY WRITES

Mrs. S. Saunders received the following letter from Sergt. George Kingsbury who has been on duty in England since being discharged from the Hospital since early last year:—

Canadian M. G. Depot
Seaford,
February, 14, 1918.

Dear Mrs. Saunders:—,

I guess by this time, you are expecting to hear from me. Have just received a letter from Jim, and tells me that you are not any too well. I do hope that by this time you are feeling yourself again. How is Mr. Saunders getting along, do hope that he is feeling as well he possibly can be. Will you will see that I am still here at Seaford and still on the same job, at the Station, but guess that before long, they will be getting after me, to go back to the "Firing Line" again. Well I should worry for have had by this time, a pretty good rest. During my stay here, have met a few of the Walkerton Boys, who belong to the 160th Battalion, and one of them was Billy Richl. Was never so surprised in my life, when he walked into my hut, he looked the same as ever. He was down here taking a Course, but has now gone back with the rest of them to where they are camped in England Well, there does not seem to be anything fresh, to write about. Of course, everyone is expecting a great offensive undertaken by the enemy, but he will be held and pay dearly. Glad to say that I am feeling pretty good in health, and anxiously longing to get back to you again. Now I will close for this time, shall be so glad to hear from you, and please remember me to all who should enquire of my welfare.

I am,
Your Friend,
George Kingsbury.

ALBERT PINKERTON DEAD

Prominent Resident of Northern Village Succumbs to Attack of Pneumonia —A Good and Beloved Citizen

In the death of Mr. Albert Pinkerton, which occurred at his home at Pinkerton on Sunday morning, a central figure in the life of that community was removed. Mr. Pinkerton was postmaster, storekeeper, secretary of the Fair, treasurer of the church, and took an active interest in all public movements. He was apparently at the very height of life's activity when he was suddenly attacked by a serious illness two weeks ago. The doctors diagnosed his case as pneumonia with traces of ptomaine poisoning and his condition was very serious from the first. He soon lapsed into a delirious condition and never really gained consciousness. Mr. Pinkerton showed himself always public-spirited, even to the sacrifice of his private interests. Unassuming and rather diffident in manner, he showed a consideration and thoughtfulness for others that marks the true gentleman. His death is deeply mourned in the community. Besides his widow, a family of five boys and three daughters are left to mourn. Gordon, the eldest son is Overseas, Aileen is attending Normal College at Stratford, Marie attending High School at Walkerton, the others being at home. The funeral which was held on Tuesday afternoon to Douglas Hill Cemetery, was very large, friends coming from many miles in all directions. Service was conducted by Rev. R. M. Gale, pastor of Pinkerton Presbyterian Church.

This month's electric light bills show a reduction in the commercial rate for offices and stores. The old rate was 10c per k. w. h. with discount. The new rate is 10c. for the first 15 K. W H. and 5 cents for each subsequent K. W. H.

Passenger Train Stalled

The C. P. R. noon train was stalled just outside of town near Alex. Stroder's farm on Thursday when the engine threw a side-rod causing one pair of driving-wheels to leave the rails. A carriage was sent out and brought the passengers in to town. It was ten o'clock at night before the train pulled up at the station.

Old Land-mark Removed

In the removal of Mr. R. H. McKay's old fanning mill works which was torn down last week, another of Walkerton's old land-marks has been removed. Looking back a few years to its owner's vigorous days, many citizens can remember the time when this building hummed with industry and was the central point from which men with teams radiated to all parts of this district, supplying the farmers of half a dozen counties with their wants in the one particular line. Ex-Mayor R. H. McKay, who was second in none in enterprise, opened up all that section of the town, disposing of it bit by bit for residential building purposes. Conditions have changed greatly since those times. The countryside, now networked with railways, depends for its supplies of this kind on the larger centres and long-distance teaming is a thing of the past.

Dynamiting The Ice

The past two days' thaw is taking away the snow rapidly. The river has risen to flood height and unless there is a change in temperature, the flood will be the worst in years. On Tuesday night the ice broke below Truax's dam but got jammed around the C. P. R. bridge. In an effort to get the jam cleared before the ice would break above the dam the Firemen fired several charges of dynamite but didn't accomplish anything the ice being possibly too soft.

Ice Broke Water Main

The ice broke the watermain under the East end bridge Tuesday night, let the water out of the reservoir and left the East Ward without town water. It will be impossible to fix the main until the river gets low in summer but the Waterworks Committee overcame the difficulty by a temporary arrangement. The four inch main was plugged at both sides of river and a two inch pipe will be run temporarily across the bridge which will supply the needs of the East warders until the regular main can be replaced.

Spring Assizes

Only one case is on the docket for the Spring Assizes which opens here Monday before Mr. Justice Lennox. This is Robinson v. Robinson, a Bruce Tp. suit, brought to determine the ownership of goods seized by the Sheriff, the wife claiming that goods seized on behalf of the husband's creditors are her property. This was entered as a jury case but Barrister Otto E. Klein withdrew his notice for a jury not wishing to put the County to the expense of bringing a jury here for one case. A big saving is thus effected as it would have been necessary for the jury to come here Saturday and remain until Tuesday.

The enrolling of the "Soldiers of the Soil" throughout Canada takes place the coming week and all the Walkerton boys who intend to "do their bit" should hand in their names at once to Mr. N. C. McKay at the Department of Agriculture.

Death of Mrs. Butler

The death occurred at Waterloo, last Thursday, March 14th, of Emelie Montague, wife of Mr. W. E. Butler, formerly manager of the Merchants Bank, Walkerton. Mrs. Butler had been poorly for a number of years. The deceased was a sister of the late W. A. McLean, Master-in-Chancery and a sister of Mrs. H. P. O'Connor. She lived for many years in Walkerton both before and after marriage. Her husband entered the bank here as a junior clerk and became accountant. Years later he retired as manager. Lately they have lived retired at Waterloo. Besides her husband, one son, Capt. Lee Butler, on active service, and two daughters. Misses Keeth and Isabel survive. The remains were brought to Walkerton for interment on Saturday, arriving on the noon G. T. R. train. In the absence of Rev. R. Perdue, who is taking medical treatment at Toronto, the funeral service was conducted by Rev. Mr. Shaw, of Hanover. The following old friends acted as pall-bearers:—Messrs Chas. Fox, W. M. Shaw, T. E. Attwood, C. H. Rogers, H. McCrum, D. Robertson, J. A. Rowland.

CORP. CUNNINGHAM'S FATE

Was Instantly Killed While Directing Fire of His Gun Against Enemy Lines—His Officer and Chums Praise His Work Highly

Corp. Chester Cunningham was killed instantly while superintending the working of his trench mortar during a barage concentrated on the German lines. Two others were killed with him. Letters received by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Cunningham, from his commanding officer and from two of his chums speak in highest praise of the gallant young Walkertonian as a soldier and as a man. Corp. Ed. Eidt, D. C. M., who has been with Chester for three years, ever since the boys enlisted with the Tobermory Wireless Guard, sent Chester's mother a thoughtful and comforting letter, which gives full information. The letter, which was received here Tuesday reads:—

Just a line to extend to you our sympathy on behalf of the boys of the battery. Chester's death will be a sad loss for you folks at home, as it was for us here, and you have our deepest and most sincere sympathy. The battery has lost one of the best Corporals it has ever had. He always went cheerfully about his duties whether in the trenches or out, and his presence inspired the men with whom he worked. He has been in all the big fights, the whole length of the British line in France, Ypres, the Somme, Vimy, Hill 70 and was wounded at Passchendaele Ridge, when he was sent to a base hospital for several months. He went into the trenches shortly after coming back to France and was killed instantly on the morning of Feb. 14th while firing his trench mortar in a barage concentrated on the German lines.

His body was brought out of the line and we buried him in the Canadian cemetery. The burial services were conducted by Capt. Farrel formerly of Kincardine, Chaplain of the 44th Battalion. The bodies of Everett Truax and Leith Russel are buried in the same cemetery. Chester met his death just a year from the day that Leith was killed, on Feb. 15th, 1917. If we live to see home again we will tell you all about it.

Chester had some photos taken while on leave and they have just arrived from the photographer in London. They are very good pictures of him and I am forwarding them to you from here. If you could spare one, give one of them to my brother to keep for me, as I would like to have one as a keepsake of Ches. His personal effects, snapshots, signet ring, badges etc., have been sent to you by our paymaster. We have all found Chester a staunch comrade and friend and he has done his part in many an emergency during his eighteen months on the firing-line, and had he lived through this war, I am certain that his career in life would have been successful, just as he was a successful and efficient soldier in the Canadian Forces. Yours in sincere sympathy, Cpl. E. G. Eidt, Cpl. R. A. Oberle, W. A. Ross, Lieut.

Chester's Commanding Officer, Capt. R. W. Course writes: He was instantly killed while superintending the working of his gun during a raid. As was usual with him he was in high spirits at the prospect of straffing the Hun, and it is men of his calibre that have gained for the Canadian Corps, the name which it now holds. He was universally liked throughout, the Battery, and the sympathy of the officers, N. C. O's and men is extended to you in your great loss.

Lieut. Mel. Wilson, one of Chester's Walkerton chums, sent a nice letter of sympathy from Overseas on an early mail. In the course of the letter he said:—Chester was a good soldier, one of the best. He was a great favorite with his officers, N. C. O's and privates and any of them would have done anything in their power for "Cunny,".

WALKERTON, MARCH 21st, '18

EDITORIAL COMMENT

HERE is a new municipal stunt which we will follow with interest. Guelph has a bill before the Legislature for the re-organization of the civic administration. The bill is being engineered through the House by Sam Carter M. L. A. This bill does away with the election of Mayor. Eighteen councillors are to be elected, the six highest holding office for three years, the next six for two years and the others for one year, six retiring each year. The Mayor is chosen from and by the council. This plan has much to commend itself even though it is not a new idea. Boards of Education being elected that way. But the councillors will thus get the experience without being compelled to go before the ratepayers each year, and the citizens will reap the benefits or should, of the experience thus gained in the three year term.

THE occupations of the 234 members composing the new House of Commons, according to figures compiled by W. F. O'Connor, general returning officer, are: Barristers, 78; notaries, 3; conveyancer, 1; physicians, 23; veterinaries, 2; dentist, 1; farmers, 39; rancher, 1; publishers and journalists, 11; educationists, 2; manufacturers, 23; lumber operators, 7; contractors, 2; merchants, 22; brokers and agents, 17; plumber, 1; railway conductor, 1; land surveyor, 1; military officers, 4. In addition to the four members who are designated as officers and soldiers, there will be about a dozen others in the House who have served in the war.

SOME time ago Sam Carter of Guelph a member of the Ontario legislature, made the proposal that on account of the war and as an example to the people, that the members take only $1000 of their sessional indemnity and leave the other $400 to the province. The suggestion was so unpopular that he couldn't get a seconder.

MEMORIAL SERVICE

Was Held at the Methodist Church on Sunday for Two Walkerton Heroes who Made the Supreme Sacrifice in Flanders

The memory of two of Walkerton's gallant sons, Sergt. Wm. Wolfe and Corp. Chester Cunningham, who gave their lives for King and Country, was fittingly honored at the Methodist Church on Sunday morning.

The front of the auditorium was draped in Royal purple and white, and there was a profusion of beautiful flowers. The building was filled by a congregation which represented all denominations of the town.

Rev. C. W. Cosens took for his text II Cor. 15: 26—The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death. In an eloquent and thoughtful discourse he outlined Christianity's Mission in the world referring to the emancipation of womanhood, then coming on down through the centuries, the freeing of the slave, the destruction of liquor traffic, and struggle for the overthrow of military oppression. Then he dwelt on the Victory of Christ over death and the Victory that comes to every Christian. The speaker paid a tribute to the noble boys who have offered their lives a sacrifice on the altar of liberty and justice. He regretted that he had not known the young men for whom the Memorial Service was held, they having gone to the Front before his time. He called upon Rev. J. W. Sanderson, who knew one of the boys intimately. Rev. Mr. Sanderson said he had known the Cunningham family since 1884 and knew Chester as a clean, honest, truthful, upright boy. He spoke of his willingness to take his part in Church work as a Christian young man. Chester made his decision to go to the Front not rashly but by deliberate determination to do his duty as a citizen for his God and Country. He had placed duty above everything else. We heard of him as being wounded, then later of his being buried by a shell, then of his being disabled, then of his few days' leave in England, and then of his going back to duty and to his death. In conclusion he pointed out the comfort of the Christian's hope and the example of noble sacrifice. The young hero would still live on in the lives of those to whom he was near and dear.

The musical program, in charge of Miss Flossie Cosens, was an impressive part of the service. This included a quartett, "Under the Flag", by Messrs Hehn, Glebe, Rats, and Tovell, a solo by Miss Seller, "He wipes the Tear from Every Eye;" Anthem, "One Sweetly Solemn Thought"; Anthem, "Brave Hearts Lie Still", in which solo parts were taken by Mrs. Skelton and Miss Dippel. A reading, "To Those Who Have lost", was splendidly given by Miss Ruth Garner. The service concluded with the singing of "God Save Our Men; God Save Our King", followed by the playing of the Dead March in Saul, the congregation standing.

It will also remove summer clothes, and also spring and winter clothes, not only from the man who drinks it, but also from his wife and children. Why He Appealed For Exemption

A St. Louis man has applied for exemption on the ground that he is a newly-married man and he quotes from Deuteronomy as follows:—"When a man hath taken a new wife he shall not go out to war, neither shall he be charged with any business; but he shall be free at home for one year and cheer up his wife which he hath taken." This is said to be the first time a quotation of this kind from the old Hebraic law has been so cited.

There have been many ways by which women have responded to their names at the roll call of various societies but the latest is from Tara. There the members of the Women's Institute asked a conundrum as they responded to their names. What a time the local 'conundrumist' would have had there.

The West still demands horses from Ontario. On Tuesday a carload was shipped from here by Mr. Geo. Craig, and two carloads by Irwin Bros., of Walkerton. We hear that some of the farmers who disposed of all their horses to the buyers are having difficulty in obtaining teams for their Spring work. With the attractive prices for wheat the western farmers are apparently determined to produce as much as they can this year, and require extra horse power to carry on the work.—Paisley Advocate.

Port Elgin Times: A number of citizens of Port Elgin are receiving letters from the Registrar at London, in which they are asked to give information concerning a number of men who are seeking exemption. Is this the proper course to take to secure information? The local tribunal has investigated and passed upon these cases, and it would seem an evidence of weakness on the part of the authorities when they expect that letters sent out in hit-and-miss style will result in a fair and unbiased opinion. Should a man be sent to war or kept from war on the casual opinion gleaned from a few persons?

We hear a great deal about the tired business man, but you haven't heard much about how tired the front street men of Port Elgin are. Every day it's a collector or canvasser for something. Pte Woods suffered severe wounds in the left leg, and his ankle is stiff. Both men feel the effects of their terrible experience upon their nervous system, but are in good heart, and glad to get back to Canada alive.—Paisley Advocate.

Mail Couriers' Wages

The following letter, signed "Walkerton Rural Mail Couriers," appeared in Saturday's London Advertiser:—Seeing the splendid article you had for the city mail carriers on your editorial page in Wednesday's issue, after reading same I felt that there are others connected with the postal department also in need of some consideration in the way of a raise in salary, and that is the mail-couriers. The average man in this neighborhood doesn't get more than about $600 a year, and the way the cost of living has gone up by leaps and bounds, by feeding the necessary horse or two, according to distance, at oats $1.10 a bushel keeps the mail courier guessing where the next loaf of bread will come from. Some will say: Why did you tender so low? It is because things have changed so quick and a mail contract is for four years—that's why the mail man is in a bad way, and the best way to meet this is to put all mail contracts on the mileage system. We hope when Parliament meets some justice will be done to the mail-carriers in cities and also the mail couriers radiating from the different postoffices in Canada.

The death occurred at Carlsruhe on Monday of last week of Mrs. August Freiburger in her fortieth year. Death was due to Grave's disease. The late Mrs. Freiburger who was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hundt of Carlsruhe was a woman of sterling disposition and her death leaves a sad vacancy. Keep a Hog.

The Provincial Board of Health Regulations have been relaxed to allow citizens of urban municipalities to keep a pig so long as the animal and its pen are kept in a sanitary condition. The consent of the Local Board of Health must first be secured before any one can start a piggery. In case there is a dispute between the pig owner and the local Board, a plan and all the facts connected with the case are sent to Dr. J. W. McCulloch, Provincial M. O. H. and his decision is final. But don't put your hog in the cellar as a Kitchener alderman did. Last year great strels was laid on the hen as a wealth producer and this year with the high price of pork and bacon, the watchword of the Agricultural Dept. is "keep a hog".

Lightning Stunt

While driving home on Thursday evening, Messrs. Walter and Percy Dryden, of the Alloway Mills here, had a thrilling experience. There was an electric storm that night, and just as they were passing the farm of Mr. Weber, on the Elora road, the first vivid flash of lightning occurred. Mr. Percy Dryden, who was driving, neither saw the lightning nor knows anything of what happened immediately afterwards, as he was instantly stunned. However, the horse was thrown against a milk-stand, but regained the road and proceeded homeward to Dryden's Corners. Though still somewhat dazed, the man were quite capable when they reached home and felt no after-effects. An examination of the horse and harness next morning showed the bridle leather burned and shrivelled and the horse's hair and eyes scorched. It was not only a narrow escape but a demonstration of the peculiar stunts which lightning is capable of performing.—Harriston Review.

Lesson 12---First Quarter, March 24, 1918.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES

Lesson Text, Mark 6:32-44. Memory Verse, Mark 6:50—Golden Text, Matt. 26:28—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

After they laid away the body of John the Baptist, and had told Jesus all that they had done and taught, our Lord said that they should come away from the crowd and rest awhile, for so many were coming and going they had no leisure even to eat (vss. 30-32). To those who long for rest He says, "I know thy works," and he also says, "Come unto me and I will give you rest" (Rev. 2:2; Matt. 11:28). Contrast those who some day will have such a glorious rest and those who will never rest day nor night (Rev. 14:11). It may be His will for some that they continue at work until absent from the body or caught up to meet Him in the air.

The two parts of to-day's lesson, feeding the multitudes and toiling in the night storm, simply and wonderfully set forth our present occupation as his followers, and present conditions till He come. The feeding of the five thousand is the only miracle recorded in each of the four gospels, the night storm is found in all but Luke. When the multitudes saw them departing across the sea, they ran afoot and outwent them, and came together unto Him. When He saw the multitudes He was moved with compassion for these shepherdless sheep, and began to teach them many things (vss. 33, 34). It was nearly passover time and Jesus had gone up into a mountain with his disciples, but the multitudes followed Him because they saw his miracles on them that were diseased; so He healed their sick as well as taught them (John 6:1-4; Matt. 14:14). In Luke 9:11 it is written that he spake unto them of the Kingdom of God and healed them that had need of healing. Always note the association of His healing with His teaching concerning the Kingdom (Matt. 4:23). As the day wore away, and the evening came, the disciples became a little concerned about the multitudes having nothing to eat, and so they asked the Lord to send them away into the villages to buy bread (vss. 35, 36). How great must have been their surprise when He said: "They need not depart, give ye them to eat" (vs. 37; Matt. 15:16).

Here we need to notice John 6:5-9, and the suggestion of Philip and Andrew; the one saying how each one might have a little if— and the other apologizing for speaking of a lad who had five barley loaves and two small fishes. The Lord's suggestion, or rather command, was simply an impossibility, as they saw it. How they failed in their knowledge of Him, and seemed not to recognize in Him the One Who had fed all Israel for forty years with bread from Heaven. Do we know Him any better now? Commanding them to bring to him the boy's loaves and fishes, and make the multitudes sit down by hundreds and fifties upon the green grass, for there was much grass in the place, he took the loaves and fishes, and, looking up to Heaven, He gave thanks and blessed them, and gave them to the disciples, and through them to the multitude. They did all eat and were filled, and twelve baskets full of fragments of the loaves and fishes were gathered, for He had said, "Gather up the fragments that remain that nothing be lost." Thus 5,000 men, besides women and children, were abundantly fed (vss. 41-44 and the other gospels).

Multitudes are perishing to-day for lack of the Bread of Life, the Living Bread from Heaven, and He is saying to all who have it, "Give ye them to eat." More than half of the people on earth have never yet had a taste of the Bread of Life, while those who have tasted and hungered for more are too often given stones instead of bread. He is saying, "Eat ye that which is good and let your soul delight itself in fatness." "Eat, O friends; drink, yea, drink abundantly, O beloved" (Isa. 55:2; Song of Solomon 5:1); but where are the disciples who are ready to receive the bread at his hands and pass it on to the hungry? He received from His Father all that He passed on to others, as he said, "I have given unto them the words which thou gavest Me" (John 17:8; 12-49, 50). Only that which we receive from Him is worth passing on, for all else is naught but the thoughts and opinions of men. His cry still is, "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" There is no use saying "Here am I, send me" (Isa. 6:8) unless we are willing as his servants to carry only His message (Ex. 4:12; Jer. 1:7-9; Hag. 1:13).

He sent the multitudes away in peace, but constrained His disciples, who were evidently unwilling to leave Him—to return by boat to the other side, to Bethsaida, while he departed into a mountain alone to pray (vss. 45, 46). The wind was against them, and evidently a strong wind, for they were tossed with the waves and were toiling hard at the oars, and this continued till near morning, the fourth watch, when He came to them, walking on the sea (vss. 47, 48). He saw it all, but did not come to them till the morning. How suggestive it all is of his true disciples now. He is at the right hand of the Father making intercession for us, and we are in the world's night contending with winds and waves.

Mr. Noble has had a long and prosperous career as a farmer, has been honored on many occasions by the ratepayers of the township, has sat at County Council, and will now take a well-earned rest after a life of strenuous activity. English Rink Wins

It looked as though there would be wigs in the green, when the Irishmen challenged the English to play the annual International championship on the Seventeenth of Ireland. The English captured the local championship in 1917 from the Irish who had held it for a number of years and were anxious to get it back. But the English still reign supreme at the rink. It was 13—12 in their favor when the smoke of battle rolled away on Saturday night and now the smiling sun has come along and seemingly clinched the title for the champions until next winter. The English were called upon to defend their honors without the aid of the redoubtable Corrish curler, Mr. Ed. Peogelly who was laid up with a cold. Mr. Norman Webb however filled the gap in an acceptable manner. After the first two ends the Irish were leading by four and their lead was maintained by brilliant play until the middle of the game. Their opponents then however with their backs to the wall made a stout bid for victory and succeeded in putting the game over by the close margin of a shot. As the last stone was played the game was still in doubt. Skip Collins was lying two requiring three to tie and four to win. The stone came down with the required vim to drive out the English third, with it disappeared the 4th. and 5th Irish shots which were necessary to win the game. The game was pronounced the most exciting of the season and the losers accepted the decision in the spirit of a good sportsman. Mr. John Allen's south paw is very effective. The Professor was looked upon as dangerous by the green stones. The score:—

Norman Webb Married

Mr. Norman Webb, formerly of the 160th, who returned recently from Overseas had a telegram yesterday morning announcing that his intended bride from England would arrive the same day. The young lady was met by her intended at the noon G. T. R. train and at 5 p. m. they were made man and wife by Rev. G. C. Rock, pastor of the Baptist and Christian Church. The happy couple will live in Mr. Webb's house in the West Ward.

A Sudden Call

Death came with shocking suddenness to Mrs. Wm. Etsell, an old and highly esteemed resident of Walkerton. She was walking down town Saturday morning when she was suddenly stricken with paralysis. A neighbor passing by summoned help and she was carried into Mr. Skelton's residence where she remained in an unconscious condition. Later in the day she was removed to her home and there she passed away that evening without regaining consciousness. Mrs. Etsell had been enjoying fairly good health, although she had sustained a slight stroke last Fall, so that her sudden taking-off was a very sad shock to the bereaved family, who have the deep sympathy of the community. Mrs. Etsell was born at Streetsville, her maiden name being Mary Ann Kerney, but practically all her life was spent in Walkerton. Her husband predeceased her twenty-one years ago. Mrs. Etsell was a kind, neighborly person who had many friends. She was a member of the Baptist Church. One son and five daughters are left to mourn. They are:—Gunner H. H. (Barney) Etsell, now in France with a battery of artillery; Mrs. James McConkey of White Rock, B. C.; Mrs. (Mayor) A. P. Johnston, Mrs. John Johnston of Brant, Mrs. Arthur Dean of Walkerton, whose husband is Overseas, and Miss Maizie at home. Martin Kerney of Walkerton, and Wm. Kerney of Dryden are brothers. The funeral was held yesterday afternoon to the Walkerton cemetery, Rev. G. C Rock, pastor of the Baptist Church, conducting the service.

SOLDIERS OF THE SOIL

High School pupils who intend to go out and help on the farm as Soldiers of the Soil are getting ready to write this week on their final examinations. Quite a few from the Walkerton High School have volunteered. The girls are not permitted to go as farmers, and are perhaps a bit envious of the male pupils. Four of the girls got together the other afternoon and composed a poem about the "Soldiers of the Soil" which is good enough to print.

Am I a soldier of the soil
A follower of the plough
And shall I fear to hitch a horse
Or shrink to milk a cow?

Shall I be carried to the mow
On thistly loads of hay
While others strive with pen and ink
Examination day?

Are there no beets for me to hoe
Shall I not use the rake?
Shall I not help defeat the foe
And fight for freedom's sake?

Sure I must work if I would eat
My country 'tis for thee
I'll bear the toil, endure the pain
For the sake of liberty

Chorus

At the farm, at the farm,
Where I first saw a cow
And the burden of my books rolled away,
There I worried not at all
For I worked in overalls
And oh! I was happy all the day.

EDEN GROVE

esidents of Eden Grove were ly shocked and grieved to hear death last Sunday morning of Pinkerton. The deceased was ly respected and widely honor- . Our sincere sympathy is ex- to his family in their great loss.

Miss Clara McKinley of Camlachie has been engaged as teacher in our school. It is to be hoped that the parents will unite in sympathy with the teacher in every possible manner that her success may be assured,

We greatly regret the departure of Mr. Reid, our present school mam. Though only here for a short time he proved himself a capable teacher and endeared himself to a host of friends (including one at Paisley?)

Of those last week that came some distance to deal at Mac Scotts store, was A. L. Belbeck of Prince Albert Sask. A. L. who has been keeping a grocery in the latter town is staying with his wife, two children, and four crate of fowl at his father-in-law's, W. Atkinson. As he has sold out his store in the West, it is to be hoped that may be some chance of his settling near or in the Grove.

Rob. Bailey without whose consent no man may enter the sacred portals of the senate left on Friday last for Ottawa. He has been working at the Guelph Shell Works for some time but managed to visit old friends at the Grove for a day or two prior to leaving for his arduous duties at Ottawa.

I walked over to one of our suburbs called Cargill, last Saturday, and had a most amusing experience. I had just entered Hunstein & Wittich's store when I felt something small but sharp under my feet. Stooping down, I picked it up. It was very tiny but bright and sharp. Rather pretty too, would make, I thought, a dandy charm to hang around a certain lady. To admire it in more detail I took out a pocket magnifying glass. Imagine my dumbfounded surprise when it jumped out of my hand as nimble as you please By golly, it was Harvey Grice!

There are two rumors afloat in the Grove. Both are important to its well-being. The first is that the early and late trains are to be run again after the 28th of this month—though really the noon train is late enough. The second is that Mac Scott, our progressive merchant, is about to inaugurate a mail order department to his store. It is to be hoped this is true as it will not only give employment to many but will possibly relieve the present congestion in his store. (Above is a slight error, it is a telephone order business not a mail order that is rumored.

Rev. Storey after an able sermon last Sunday which was much enjoyed by the congregation, gave out his subject next Sabbath, "Excuses People give for Not Going to Church." If he gives them all it will be a mighty long sermon, I'm thinking.

CHEPSTOW

Mrs. O. Freedman and Mrs. Ambrose Miller departed on Friday for their homes in the vicinity of Allan, Sask., following the winter's sojourn with the former's mother, Mrs. Jos. Freedman.

In a letter to his mother, Pte. Jas. Golden states that his Battalion, which has formed a unit of the Fifth Division at Witley Camp, Eng., for over a year, has gone to France. His brother, Frank, who has served in the trenches for some months, and was gassed recently, is rapidly recovering.

Miss Mary McNab has returned to resume her position at Detroit following a two weeks' stay at her home.

Our energetic salesman, J. Schutkopski, who was confined to his bed the greater part of the past week, is able to be about again. Our town can ill afford to lose the quickening influence of such a live wire as Jos, even for a few days.

HANOVER

Mr. Jasper, head of the Hydro staff working in Hanover, has a map of the proposed street lighting for Hanover. It certainly looks well on paper and this burg should be a regular little scintillator when all is complete. There will be 122 street lights of 160 watt capacity in town, 44 of which will be placed on the main street.

Pte. Ernest Brooks, son of Mrs. Abott of Elmwood, who enlisted here, has sustained a gunshot wound in the right shoulder while fighting in France.

Mr. Uriah Curtis, one of the earliest settlers of this district, is still hale and hearty at the age of 93 years. He is staying with his son, Robert, in Brant. He has a great grandson in the trenches in France. Mr. Curtis is one of the pioneer Methodists of this district and a man who always enjoyed the esteem of those who knew him. He can read well today without his glasses.

Mrs. Patchell received a telegram from Ottawa last week informing her that her husband, Scout W. D. Patchell, had received a gunshot wound in the right hand on March 2nd. He trained with the 124th Pals Battalion of Toronto, went overseas 1½ years ago, and has been in France 11 months. His many friends here hope that his injury may not prove serious.

The town standpipe, having a capacity of 100,000 gallons, and towering 185 feet above the ground, collapsed at 9.30 Saturday night with a crash that could be heard all over the place. During the recent zero weather the water in the big tank froze solid, and huge icicles formed all about the tank Following the mild weather yesterday huge pieces of ice, some of them weighing many hundreds of pounds, crashed downward. Steel girders supporting the standpipe were smashed off like matchwood. About 9:30 in the evening there was a terrific crash, and when citizens investigated they found the remains of the standpipe cattered over an area larger than an acre. Huge blocks of ice some of them five feet in thickness, shot in all directions, and the houses of Mrs. Wright and Mr. Beaman had a close call from being smashed. The loss to the town will be fully $10,000, and in the meantime the local water supply and fire protection system suffers severely. The standpipe was so badly wrecked that an entire new one will have to be built, the material in the old one being useless now.

KINLOSS

At their last regular meeting on Saturday March 9th, the Kinloss Red Cross Society packed two bales of supplies to be sent to headquarters in Toronto. In spite of severe weather and unfavorable condition of roads during the winter our meetings have been well attended, the average attendance being seventeen. The contents of the bales were as follows.—60 suits of pyjamas, 3½ doz. towels, 2 doz. face cloths, 100 mouth wipes, 3 hospital shirts, 2 doz. surgical pads, 40 handkerchiefs 15, personal property bags, 4 doz. pillow cases, 2 doz. sheets, 1 dozday shirts. Total value amounting to $164.45. In addition to this we have on hand socks and underwear to the value of $65.45 to be sent directly to the boys in the trenches.

Mrs. C. N. MacKenzie.

Mrs. S. Whyte, who has had a slight attack of pneumonia is, we are pleased to report, on the road to recovery.

Some of the prominent citizens of this burg have been out ditching to keep the water from flooding.

Miss Clara Schwalm has returned from visiting her sister, Mrs. Werlich, at Wallaceburg.

The local Ford garage is in fine shape for Spring business.

A good many farmers in this vicinity are planning for a big season of syrup boiling.

Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Bilger are moving to their 50 acre farm on the 10th Concession and have leased their residence in town to Mr. Norman Hamel for the summer months.

The Hamel Furniture Factory is working overtime now owing to the rush of orders.

The mill yard of Schwalm & Sons is almost covered with piles of logs and a good many are piled on the side of the road near the foundry. This means a busy year's work for this firm.

Mr. Peter Kaufman of Con. 10 is putting up a new straw shed, and Mr. Con. Hill is putting up a new barn, this summer.

BRANT AVENUE

Mrs. Jack Johnston received a sad shock on Saturday in the sudden death of her mother, Mr. Wm. Etsell of Walkerton.

The waterworks system at the Irvine Bros. farm froze up last week, but you can't beat Hank. He soon had temporary pipes laid on top of the ground and a good supply of water.

Herman Grant and Walt Blackwell are working for the Irvines.

Mrs. James McCarter, who was operated upon at the Bruce County Hospital last week is in a serious condition. Her many friends in this neighborhood hope for her speedy recovery.

PROLOGUE.

"Seventeen" is a literary thing of beauty and a joy for all the time you are reading it.

Booth Tarkington never wrote a story that equaled it for fun and entertainment and character drawing.

If you are twenty-seven or thirty-seven or seventy-seven you will at once bark back to seventeen—to when YOU were seventeen and in love with some beautiful Miss Pratt of the same age.

There's a smile in every few words and a laugh in nearly every line.

CHAPTER I.
William.

WILLIAM SYLVANUS BAXTER paused for a moment of thought in front of the drug store at the corner of Washington street and Central avenue, considering what kind of an ice cream soda he would have, when he was roused by the bluff greeting of an acquaintance not dissimilar to himself in age, manner and apparel.

"Hi'lo, Silly Bill!" said this person, hailing beside William Sylvanus Baxter. "What's the news?"

William showed no enthusiasm. On the contrary, a frown of annoyance appeared upon his brow. The nickname "Silly Bill," long ago compounded by merry child comrades from William and Sylvanus, was not to his taste, especially in public, where he preferred to be addressed simply and manfully as Baxter. Any direct expression of resentment, however, was difficult, since it was plain that Johnnie Watson intended no offense whatever and but spoke out of custom.

"Don't know any," William replied coldly.

"Dull times, ain't it?" said Mr. Watson, a little depressed by his friend's manner. "I heard Miss Parcher was comin' back to town yesterday, though."

"Well, let her!" returned William, still severe.

"They said she was goin' to bring a girl to visit her," Johnnie began in a confidential tone. "They said she was a reglar ringdinger, and"—

"Well, what if she is?" the discouraging Mr. Baxter interrupted. "Makes little difference to me, I guess!"

"Oh, no, it don't! You don't take any interest in girls! Oh, no!"

"No, I do not!" was the emphatic and heartless retort. "I never saw one in my life I'd care whether she lived or died!"

"Honest, is that so?"

"Yes, 'honest!'" William replied sharply. "They could all die; I wouldn't notice!"

Johnnie Watson was profoundly impressed. "Why, I didn't know you felt that way about 'm, Silly Bill. I always thought you were kind of"—

"Well, I do feel that way about 'em!" said William Sylvanus Baxter, and, outraged by the repetition of the offensive nickname, he began to move away. "You can tell 'em so for me. If you want to!" he added over his shoulder. And he walked haughtily up the street, leaving Mr. Watson to ponder upon this case of misogyny, never until that moment suspected.

It was beyond the power of his mind to grasp the fact that William Sylvanus Baxter's cruel words about "girls" had been uttered because William was annoyed at being called "Silly Bill" in a public place and had not known how to object otherwise than by showing contempt for any topic of conversation proposed by the offender.

William meanwhile made his way toward the "residence section" of the town. He walked in his own manner, using his shoulders to emphasize an effect of carelessness which he wished to produce upon observers, for his consciousness of observers was abnormal, since he had it whether any one was looking at him or not, and it reached a crucial stage whenever he perceived persons of his own age, but of opposite sex, approaching.

A person of this description was encountered upon the sidewalk within a hundred yards of his own home, and William Sylvanus Baxter saw her while yet she was afar off. He had perceived even in the distance that she was unknown to him, a stranger, because at least all the girls in this part of town who dressed as fantastically as [illegible] were known to him, as the [illegible] knew the corner.

William rested an elbow upon the gatepost and with his chin reposing in his hand gazed long in the direction in which the unknown had vanished. And his soul was tremulous, for she had done her work but too well.

"'Indifferink!'" he murmured, thrilling at his own exceedingly indifferent imitation of her voice. "'Indifferink!' that was just what he would have her think—that he was a cold, indifferent man. It was what he wished all girls to think. And "sarcastic!" He had been curious one day when May Parcher said that Joe Bullitt was "awfully sarcastic." William had spent the ensuing hour in an object lesson intended to make Miss Parcher see that William Sylvanus Baxter was twice as sarcastic as Joe Bullitt ever thought of being, but this great effort had been unsuccessful, because William failed to understand that Miss Parcher had only been sending a sort of message to Mr. Bullitt. It was a device not unique among her sex.

"'So indifferink!'" murmured William, leaning dreamily upon the gatepost. "Indifferink!" He tried to get the exact cooing quality of the unknown's voice. "'Indifferink!' And, repeating the honeyed word, so entrancingly distorted, he fell into a kind of stupor, vague, beautiful pictures rising before him, the one least blurred being of himself on horseback, sweeping between Flopit and a racing automobile. And then, having restored the little animal to its mistress, William sat carelessly in the saddle (he had the guardsman's seat) while the perfectly trained steed wheeled about, forelegs in the air, appearing to go. "But shall I not see you again to thank you more properly?" she cried, pleading. "Some other day—perhaps," he answered and left her in a cloud of dust.

"Will-ee!" she shrilled. "Look! Good!"

"Oh, Will-ee!"

Thus a shrill voice, to his ears ridiculously different from that other, interrupted and dispersed his visions. Little Jane, his ten-year-old sister, stood upon the front porch, the door open behind her, and in her hand she held a large slab of bread and butter covered with apple sauce and powdered sugar. Evidence that she had sampled this compound was upon her cheeks, and to her brother she was a repulsive sight.

"Will-ee!" she shrilled. "Look! Good!" And to emphasize the adjective she indelicately patted the region of her body in which she believed her stomach to be located. "There's a slice for you on the dining room table," she informed him joyously.

Outraged, he entered the house without a word to her and, proceeding to the dining room, laid hands upon the slice she had mentioned, but declined to eat it in Jane's company. He was in an exalted mood, and, though in no condition of mind or body would he refuse food of almost any kind, Jane was an intrusion he could not suffer at this time.

He carried the refection to his own room and, locking the door, sat down to eat, while, even as he ate, the spell that was upon him deepened in intensity.

"Oh, eyes!" he whispered softly in that cool privacy and shelter from the world. "Oh, eyes of blue!"

The mirror of a dressing table sent him the reflection of his own eyes, which also were blue, and he gazed upon them and upon the rest of his image the while he ate his bread and butter and apple sauce and sugar. Finally he rose and approached the dressing table to study himself at greater advantage.

Beyond doubt he was acting a little scene of indifference. Other symbolic dramas followed, though an invisible observer might have been puzzled for a key to some of them. One, however, would have proved easily intelligible. His expression having altered to a look of pity and contrition, he turned from the mirror and, walking slowly to a chair across the room, used his right hand in a peculiar manner, seeming to stroke the air at a point about ten inches above the back of the chair. "There, there, little girl," he said in a low, gentle voice. "I didn't know you cared."

Then, with a rather abrupt dismissal of this theme, he returned to the mirror and, after a questioning scrutiny, nodded solemnly, forming with his lips the words, "The real thing—the real thing at last!"

He meant that, after many imitations had imposed upon him, Love—the real thing—had come to him in the end. And as he turned away he murmured, "And even her name—unknown!"

Seating himself at a small writing table by the window, he proceeded to express his personality in something he considered a poem.

Three-quarters of an hour having sufficed for its completion, he solemnly signed it and then read it several times in a state of hushed astonishment. He had never dreamed that he could do anything like this:

MILADY.

I do not know her name
Though it would be the same
Where roses bloom at twilight
And the lark takes his flight
It would be the same anywhere
Where music sounds in air
I was never introduced to the lady
So I could not call her Lass or Sadie
So I will call her Milady
By the sands of the sea
She always will be Just Milady to me.

—William Sylvanus Baxter, Esq., July 14

Suddenly again that voice:

"Will-ee!"

To William, in his high and lonely mood, this piercing summons brought no actual shudder, and the very thought of Jane (with tokens of apple sauce and sugar still upon her cheek, probably) seemed a kind of sacrilege. He fiercely swore his favorite oath, acquired from a hero of a work of fiction he admired. "Ye gods!" and concealed his poem in the drawer of the writing table.

"Will-ee! Mamma wants you!" Jane hammered on the door.

"What you want?" he shouted.

Jane explained, certain pauses indicating that her attention was partially diverted to another slice of bread and butter and apple sauce and sugar. "Will-ee, mamma wants you—wants you to go help Genesis bring some washtubs home—and a tin ole'es boiler—from the secondhand man's store."

"What!"

Jane repeated the outrageous message, adding, "She wants you to hurry—and I got some bread and butter and apple sauce and sugar for comin' to tell you."

His refusal was direct and infuriated, but there was a decisive tapping upon the door, and his mother's voice interrupted:

"Hush, Willie! Open the door, please."

He obeyed furiously, and Mrs. Baxter walked in with a deprecating air, while Jane followed, so profoundly interested that, until almost the close of the interview, she held her bread and butter and apple sauce and sugar at a sort of way station on its journey to her mouth.

"That's a nice thing to ask me to do!" stormed the unfortunate William. "Ye gods! Do you think Joe Bullitt's mother would dare to"—

"Wait, dearie!" Mrs. Baxter begged pacifically. "I just want to explain'—"

"Explain!" Ye gods!"

"Now, now, just a minute, Willie!" she said. "What I wanted to explain was why it's necessary for you to go with Genesis for the"—

"Never!" he shouted. "Never! You expect me to walk through the public streets with that awful lookin' old nigger"—

"Genesis isn't old," she managed to interpolate. "He"—

But her frantic son disregarded her. "Secondhand washtubs!" he vociferated. "And tin clothes boilers! That's what you want your son to carry through the public streets in broad daylight! Ye gods!"

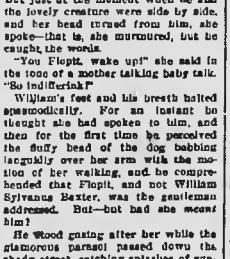
"Well, there isn't anybody else," she said. "Please don't rave so, Willie, and say 'Ye gods' so much. It really isn't nice. I'm sure nobody'll notice you"—

"Nobody!" His voice cracked in anguish. "Oh, no! Nobody except the whole town! Why, when there's anything disgusting has to be done in this family—why do I always have to be the one? Why can't Genesis bring the secondhand washtubs without me? Why can't the secondhand store deliver 'em? Why can't"—

"That's what I want to tell you," she interposed hurriedly, and as the youth lifted his arms on high in a gesture of ultimate despair and then threw himself miserably into a chair she obtained the floor. "The secondhand store doesn't deliver things," she said. "I bought them at an auction, and it's going out of business, and they have to be taken away before half past 4 this afternoon.

"Genesis can't bring them in the wheelbarrow because, he says, the wheel is broken, and he says he can't possibly carry two tubs and a wash boiler himself. And he can't make two trips because it's a mile and a half, and I don't like to ask him, anyway. And it would take too long, because he has to get back and finish cutting the grass before your papa gets home this evening. Papa said he had to! Now, I don't like to ask you, but it really isn't much. You and Genesis can just slip up there and"—

"Slip!" moaned William. "Just slip up there!! Ye gods!"



"Genesis is waiting on the back porch," she said. "Really it isn't worth your making all this fuss about."

"Ye gods!" He clasped his head in his hands, crushed, for he knew that the curse was upon him and he must go. "Ye gods!"

Genesis and his dog were waiting just outside the kitchen door, and of all the world these two creatures were probably the last in whose company William Sylvanus Baxter desired to make a public appearance. The aged, grayish, sleeveless, neckless garment which sheltered Genesis from waist to collar bone could not have been mistaken for a jersey.

Upon the feet of Genesis were things which careful study would have revealed to be patent leather dancing pumps long dead and several times buried, and upon his head pressing down his markedly criminal ears, was a once derby hat of a brown not far from Genesis' own color, though decidedly without his gloss. A large ring of strange metal, with the stone missing, adorned a finger of his right hand, and from a corner of his mouth projected an unlighted and spreading cigar stub.

And Genesis' dog, scratching himself at his master's feet, was the true complement of Genesis, for, although he was a yaller dog, he was a dog that would have been persecuted anywhere in the world as a colored person's dog

When Her Dark Lashed Eyelids Slowly Lifted, He Had a Flash of Inspiration.

William necessarily, yet with extraordinary reluctance, accompanying them. But just at the moment when he and the lovely creature were side by side, and her head turned from him, she spoke—that is, she murmured, but he caught the words.

"You Flopit, wake up!" she said in the tone of a mother talking baby talk. "So indifferink!"

William's feet and his breath halted spasmodically. For an instant he thought she had spoken to him, and then for the first time he perceived the fluffy head of the dog bobbing languidly over her arm with the motion of her walking, and he comprehended that Flopit, and not William Sylvanus Baxter, was the gentleman addressed. But—but had she meant him?

He stood gazing after her while the glamorous parasol passed down the shady street, catching splashes of sunshine through the branches of the maple trees, and the cottony head of the tiny dog continued to be visible, bobbing rhythmically over a filmy sleeve. Had she meant that William was indifferent. Was it William that she really addressed?

He took two steps to follow her, but a suffocating shyness stopped him abruptly, and, in a horror lest she should glance round and detect him in the act, he turned and strode fiercely to the gate of his own home before he dared to look again. And when he did look, affording great amusement to [illegible] who dressed as fantastically as [illegible] and then as the [illegible] formed the corner.

A BRANT PIONEER

Late Christopher Gateman Helped Clear the Bush in the Days when Hardship Abounded Sixty Years Ago

Another of the few remaining pioneers of Brant, passed to his reward on Friday, March 15th, in the person of Mr. Christopher Gateman. Mr. Gateman had been poorly for a couple of years and on Tuesday night of last week he suffered a paralytic stroke. For the next few days his condition became gradually worse until the end came. Mr. Gateman was one of those early settlers of the Brant bush, who, equipped with nothing but their brawny arms and a determination to make the most of the slender opportunities, have made this country what it is to-day. Back in the early sixties before the railroad came in, Mr. Gateman at one time walked the entire distance to Guelph, bringing back over his shoulder, for fifty miles, a half cwt. of flour to provide nourishment for his young family. That was but an example of what he and others were called upon to do in those early days. Mr. Gateman was born in Mecklenburg-Schworen, in 1845 and came to this country with his parents at the age of 8 years and settled in the County of Waterloo. When he was 14 years old they came to the 4th concession, Brant, which was then all woods. Thirteen years later he was married to his present wife, then Miss Wilhemin Engel of Brant. He and his parents cleared a 300 acre farm. Then he removed to the Township of Bentinck, where he lived for three years, after which he bought a farm of 65 acres on the 9th con. of Brant, where he lived for 13 years, when he leased for a number of years a 150 acre farm on the second concession from Mr. Myles. At the expiration of a seven years' term he leased the 150 acre farm of Robt. Chambers of Greenock for five years. He then bought the farm near Solway from Mr. Charles Pegelo where he resided until retiring to Walkerton five years ago. The deceased was an active and consistent member of the Lutheran Church. He was a man of high principle, of a genial, companionable disposition and a good neighbor. Besides his widow his loss is mourned by seven surviving children. They are: Mrs. August Monk, Mrs. George Faust, Walkerton, Mrs. John Reler of Bentinck, Mrs. John Fisk of Greenock, Mrs. David Frook and Mrs. George Wilkin of Brant; Messrs Noah and Louis Gateman of Brant, and Charles at home in Walkerton. Two of his children predeceased him. Emma, who died at the age of 5 years, and John, whose death occurred at 23 years of age. Two brothers and two sisters of the deceased are still living. There are twenty-four grandchildren.

The funeral was held on Monday afternoon March 18. Rev. H. R. Mosig of, New Hamburg and Rev. Mr. Henkel of Brant conducted service at the house, and Rev. Mr. Mosig afterwards conducted service at the Lutheran Church. It was one of the largest funerals seen here in some time, friends and neighbors coming from a great distance. The pall-bearers were:—Messrs T. Pye, I. Glintz, J. Brillinger, C. Kolpin, C. Ernest, J. Wilkin.

Dreadful Doings

"Do you know there are times when it is positively terrifying to enter a church," observed a lady to the Bishop of Lincoln, at a dinner party.

"That cannot be, madam," returned the bishop: "pray explain."

"Why," said the lady, "it is when there is a canon at the reading desk, a big gun in the pulpit, when the bishop is charging his clergy, the choir murdering the anthem and the organist trying to drown the choir."

Pacific Coast Humming

In renewing her subscription to the Telescope, Mrs. W. Fay Nupes of Brebserton, Wash. U. S. A., formerly Miss Florence Smith of Walkerton, writes:—This is a very interesting town just now. It is Headquarters for Navy Yard of U. S. A. of Pacific Coast. There are over 5000 sailor boys in training here in addition to large work yards where over 6000 men are employed and turn out an immense amount of government work, including boats of all kinds, submarines and submarine chasers. The Pacific Coast is experiencing a wonderful boom at present. Seattle, Tacoma and all coast cities are fairly humming with new industries and it's impossible to secure labor except at fabulous prices. Weather is so ideal the year round it attracts the far Easterner especially this winter. We have had no cold weather and only our usual amount of rain. Gardens are being put in and trees and shrubs all budding. We have felt no shortage of coal only an advance in price so we have much to be thankful for.

Aunt Sally's Letter

To the Readers of The Walkerton Telescope

Dear Friends:—

The magic spell of Spring is there again. The robins are chirping their old familiar songs. The snow is melting and the water is running away to join the Saugeen River. We would much rather have it take a more direct course than by way of our cellars, for the havoc it makes rather turns our attention from our Spring-time dreams. It makes me think of Mr. Muldooney.

Mr. Muldooney didn't see any fun in the babbling springs in his cellar. He went to the Water Registrar's office and introduced himself and his business by saying, "My name is Muldooney. My cellar is full of water, and my hens will all be drowned if it isn't fixed, and I want you to fix it." Mr. Muldooney was informed that nothing could be done for him there; that they looked after such matters at the Mayor's office—he should go to see the Mayor. Two or three days later he called again "I come again to see about that cellar, said he; "it's worse than ever, and I want you to understand that I carry votes. But, we told you the other day, Mr. Muldooney, that we could do nothing about it here, and that you should see the Mayor about it." "The Mayor, is it? An' sure didn't I see the Mayor!" "And what did the Mayor say to you?" "Huh! What did he say? Why he said, "Mr. Muldoonay, why don't you keep ducks!"

Spring! Spring! how glad we are to greet it, with no spring in the cellar.

Sincerely Yours
Aunt Sally,
Walkerton Telescope

P. S. Don't forget I will be glad to help you in any way with your town shopping.

A carload of old newspapers, weighing over 22,000 lbs., has been shipped by the High School pupils to a city junk-dealer. About $75 will be realized, which will be handed over to the High School Patriotic Society.

Forger Nabbed At Last

Montgomery, the slick young lad who was arrested at Southampton a couple of weeks ago on advice from Lindsay, and then made good his escape from the hotel bedroom where the Constable had him locked up, was arrested at Cobourg a week or so later where he was trying to pass worthless cheques. He was wanted at various places in Ontario for forgery. When the police got him, he was in a store trying to cash a cheque for $12.65. On his person were found numerous confederate bills. On the charge of forgery and uttering bogus cheques, and for obtaining money under false pretenses he was sentenced by the Magistrate to serve five years in penitentiary on the first charge, and three years on the second, the sentences to run concurrently.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

Winnipeg, March 18.—At times during the session of the market today the market almost verged on panicky conditions. It was the first real bear market the exchange has seen in a long time. The rapid fluctuations were very hard to follow. The decline of almost five cents a bushel in the American markets was the chief reason for the weakness in Winnipeg. A considerable sum of stop orders were uncovered on the decline. The buying all the way down, was of a very strong nature. Big interests accumulated oats all the way down altho their buying was not in a sufficiently large volume to stem the wave of bear enthusiasm. In the cash market spreads were practically unchanged from Friday's close, with odd lettings of spot oats very high.

Oats closed 3¼c lower for May at 88½c; July, 3¼c lower at 83½c.

Barley closed 8½c lower for May at $1.17.

Flax closed 3½c lower for May at $3.76; July closed 3½c lower at $3.53.

Winnipeg market: Oats, spot ... May, 84¼c to 87½c to 90½c; July, 80¾c to 84½c.

When a man is nearly frozen from a ten mile drive on a cold winter day, he will hardly stop to read a poster bill. But at home in his arm chair with his legs crossed before a cheerful fire he reads his local paper, and while he is feeling good and has plenty of time, picks out the live business men of the town from the advertisements in the paper and makes up his mind where he will trade on his next trip to town.

Death of Dr Eckel

Advertising the Farm Auction Sale

(Family Herald and Weekly Star.)

The newspaper medium should not be overlooked. There are some peculiar facts in the psychology of advertising that have to be met. Perhaps the very best buyers, on the whole, pay but little attention to a sale bill. If the announcement appears in the column of his local paper, he will read it clear through.

It will, therefore, pay to be generous in buying space. Instead of confining your statement to a modest inch or two in some out-of-the-way corner, come out in the open with a display ad. Most merchants attract trade by blowing their own bugle. Nothing disrespectful about that. It's a twentieth century method of doing business. So prepare your ad as he does. Tell what kind of goods you are offering, where, when and on what terms.

Wess Russell Home.

Wess. Russell, the first of Ex-Reeve Robt Russell's boys to get back from Overseas, arrived home from England Tuesday noon and was met at the Station by a large number of citizens. Wess enlisted on April 2nd of last year, with the Canadian Mounted Rifles and has been Overseas since May last. When his unit went to France he was turned down by the Medical Board and to his deep disappointment had to return home without getting into the big fight. Before leaving he visited the 160th boys at Witley Camp, and his brother, Jack who is doing light duty at Seaford since his return from the trenches.

CORP. WILFRID YACK HOME

Hit By Shell In the Side While Preparing for the Attack at Passchendaele—Made Quick Recovery From Serious Wounds

Brown as a berry, and the picture of health and good spirits, Corp. Wilfrid Yack arrived home from Overseas Thursday noon. A large crowd of citizens gave him a hearty welcome at the station. Wilfrid, who is a son of Mr. and Mrs Louis Yack, had just graduated from Walkerton High School, and put in a year at school-teaching when he enlisted with the 71st for Service Overseas. When the battalion was broken up in England he went to France as signaller with a machine gun section. He saw a lot of hard fighting but it was not until five months ago that his name got on the casualty list. It was in preparing for the Passchendaele advance that Wilfrid and a companion went out to get the line ready. A German shell wounded him badly in the right side. It was a serious affair but fortunately his companion was able to take care of him and get him into the Hospital. The shrapnel had gone through leaving a clean wound. At any rate, Wilfrid made a quick recovery and in exactly five months from the day he was hit he was back in Canada. Corp. Yack makes light of it and says he will be as good as new after a while, except a slight weakness in his side. The fact that he was as hard as nails and in glowing health no doubt accounts for his quick recovery from a wound which might have easily have proved fatal. Corp. Yack states that the quick recovery of the Tommies is a marvel to nurses and attendants at Hospitals who had experience before the war. They recover from injuries in a fraction of the time required by civilians, the explanation being the prime physical condition they were in, when hit. Before leaving England he ran across Ted Wilhelm and saw his wound which consisted of a large bullet hole through the middle of his wrist, which would incapacitate him for further military service. Wilfrid also spent a night with some of his old chums of the 160th at Seaford, where a large number of them were taking a course in pioneer work.

PETER McCANNEL GONE

Succumbed to Serious Illness After a Plucky Fight Lasting Over Three Weeks

The death occurred at Bruce County Hospital early Saturday morning of Peter McCannel in his 52nd year. Nearly four weeks previous he had been suddenly taken ill, and hurried to the hospital. After an operation for appendicitis, peritonitis was reported to have set in, and his life from that moment was despaired of. But his rugged physique, unimpaired by bad habits of any kind or the slightest physical infirmity, battled day after day against the tightening grip of disease. Unassuming, conscientious, genial, even-tempered, and honest as the hills, he was a man who made in his quiet way many friends but not an enemy and the progress of his plucky fight against overwhelming odds was followed day by day with deeply sympathetic interest throughout the town. On Wednesday and Thursday, last, his condition showed some improvement but a change for the worse followed and about two o'clock Saturday morning he passed away. During his illness he was comforted by the constant presence of his younger brother, Malcolm, who shut up his shop a month ago in order to be near his brother and to minister to every possible need

The deceased who was the second son of the late John McCannel of Brant was born in Caledon Township, but at an early age removed with his parents to Bruce Tp. In 1884 the family removed from Bruce to the 6th Concession of Brant, retaining for some years the farm in Bruce also. Here the greater number of his years were spent Seven years ago, the parents having previously passed to their reward, the three members of the family still remaining on the homestead, removed to Walkerton, where they have since resided. After coming to town he worked as as a carpenter. The surviving brothers and sisters are:—Mrs. (Rev.) Robt. Routledge of Cuba. Mrs. James T. Crawford of Walkerton, Mrs. Ed. McDonald of Toronto, Mrs. Thos. Keyes of Kincardine, Miss Ethel at home, John S. of Vancouver, Malcolm at home. The funeral was held from the family residence, Jackson St., on Monday afternoon, a very large company of old friends from town and country being in attendance. Service was conducted by Rev. G. C. Rock. The pallbearers were:—Messrs J Brillinger, John McKinnon, Claud Cooper, John Crawford Joseph Ernest, Thos. Jenkins. Interment took place at Douglas Hill Cemetery.

Removing To Formosa

Jack Russell Weds

John Findlay Russell, the second of ex-Reeve Russell's soldier sons Overseas, was wedded in England on February 2nd to a pretty English girl, Miss Maud Sorfleet, daughter of a farmer near Denham, Buckinghamshire. John met the young lady three years ago when he went over with the 1st Contingent and judging by her photograph, which he sent home a year ago, it appears that he is a very fortunate young man. Jack is now out of the hospital where he spent several months after being buried by a shell and is doing light duty at the Can. Machine Gun Supply Depot at Seaford, England.

Wounded In Eye

Lance-Corp. Norm. Denny, one of the three sons of Mr. Wm. Denny, who are Overseas, has been wounded in the eye and is now in a Military Hospital in France. The word came in a letter to Mr. Denny from a Canadian Red Cross visitor written on Feb. 21st. The letter said that Norman had come in the day before and his eye was pretty sore, but gives no particulars of the wound. Norm. would be transferred to England soon according to the letter. It is over three years since Norm., who was scarcely seventeen at the time, enlisted with the 34th Batt'n. He went to France with the 4th Can. Inf. Batt'n and has been in the thick of it ever since. In all that time this plucky young lad has never been on the casualty list until now, although twice slightly wounded. His parents are anxiously awaiting further particulars as to the extent of his injury. LATER —A further letter received yesterday, dated March 6th, said that Norm was getting along slowly. He had a little pain in his head but not too worry. It would be some time, the letter stated, before he would be sent back to England.

WALKERTON IN 1928

In A Letter Written Ten Years Hence Old Timer Tells of Changes That Come Over This Burg in the Next Decade

Walkerton, March 28, 1928.

Dear Bill:—

It seems but the other day, Bill, since you pulled out of here for Western Canada. I can hardly realize that ten years have passed and gone. That was in 1918, the cold winter, the like of which we have never seen before or since. It was also the year of the great drought about April 1st. And to think that you have been out of touch with Walkerton ever since. I wish you could take a jaunt back to the old town, Bill. It would do you good and take it from me, you will find a good deal better town than you left. The place has grown a bit since your time, about a thousand I think. It is getting to be quite a manufacturing centre. Cheap power and lots of it from the Saugeen is certainly a great asset. The old electric light company of course sold out to the town long ago. Some people thought they got a pretty fat price, you know how those things go, but it has meant such a big thing for the town that everybody is satisfied. Of course John Rowland is a senator now and wears a plug hat Sundays and week-days. With cheap power, plenty of labor and comparatively low cost of living for workmen we find that manufacturers are not hard to interest The Board of Trade, don't smile Bill things have changed since your time, is right on the job and doesn't let anything get past. President Sam Vogan has proven a live wire. The merchants too are smiling these times. Tommy Pye says he and Albert are doing the business of their lives. We don't hear any more about rural depopulation. Folks are finding out where the Garden of Eden really is. The farms are a good deal smaller than they were ten years ago and intensive cultivation is the cry. The growing population of the manufacturing towns means a big market right at the farmers doors. Yes, the farmers are making the money. Mr. Jim Cameron, the Queen Bee of our retired farmers, is actually threatening to go back to work. And of course the Hydro radial roads have helped. We find that the hyrdo radial through here from Owen Sound is a great business getter for the merchants. While country trade has greatly increased, I don't believe there are any more merchants than in your time. Outside competition has led to the carrying of larger stocks. The merchant nowadays has to be up-to-date in his merchandising methods but he has a firmer hold on the local trade than he had ten years ago. Teatons and Timpsons have lost their glamor. Folks find they can get better service at home. Of course late shopping and late deliveries are long since a thing of the past. The stores close down an hour earlier on Saturdays than on week days. Our Co-operative parcel delivery under Tommy Wolfe's management works fine. Only three rigs are needed to give the town three deliveries a day. The Front street has been paved since your day of course, and we have a permanent roadway a mile and a quarter long from station to station. Davie George, district manager of the hydro radial road, has cut down distances in town a whole lot by giving us a five cent trolley service from station to station and intervening points. This has proved a great boon to the folks in the G. T. R neighborhood. Was the Bend sized up in your time, Bill? Well it is a nice public park now. There is a dressing place for kids who go swimming. The Town Council has added swings, tables, benches and all kinds of conveniences for picnickers and the people certainly take advantage of it in the summer. There is a band stand in the centre of the grounds and every Thursday night our crack Walkerton band gives a public open air concert, which everybody attends. You didn't know about our band? Well, when Billy Thompson and Jack Wallace and those fellows got back from the war they weren't here five minutes until they organized a Walkerton citizens' Band, and believe me Bill, it's a hum-dinger.

Our scheme of running town affairs has charged a bit since your time. Our Councillors are now elected for one, two or three years according to the vote they receive at the poll. This gives more continuity to the work of the Council and our local Aldermen get better municipal training. The Mayor is no longer elected by the people but by the Council, in the same way that the Chairman of the School Board is appointed. Mrs. Wesse, Mrs. Sheldon,

WALKERTON, MARCH 28th, '18

THE JOB HUNTING IS GOOD

The glad tidings have gone out that ronage is abolished, but to the casual visitor at Ottawa it looks as if patronage had been doubled, says the Saturday Night. Instead of only one party having a pull, both parties have a pull, a long pull, a strong pull, and a pull all together. It is the open season for job hunting at Ottawa right now. The horn of the job hunter is heard on the Hill. The hunting is good, too. Nearly everybody brings down the job he is after. This war has got to be won if the last job takes the last dollar. Every man between Prince Rupert and Cape Breton, who lifted a finger for Union Government has a claim on this bleeding country which he ought to file right now. The quality of mercy is not strained. It blesses him that gives the job and him that takes. Three men may take the same job; they may even be uncertain what the job is, but that makes no difference—the chief end of a job is the pay envelope, and so far that has come regularly. We may be winning the war by multiplying jobs, but it looks bad to see so many buzzards picking Canada's bones. Royal Commissions of one kind and another sprout over night. God knows how many railway boards, war boards, food boards, purchase boards, war trade boards—all more or less festive boards, by the way—we have at this moment. We have them in Ottawa, and we have them in Washington. The best calculators have lost track of their number. Even the Government could not tell off-hand how many there are. Appointing commissions—passing the buck they call it at Ottawa—is perhaps the best thing the Government does. It is urged by way of excuse, that most of these boards give their services for nothing—just as Sir Joseph gives his—but we are inclined to suspect this gratuitous patriotism. And no matter how gratuitous it is, the expense allowance for each patriot is ten dollars a day, and when there are so many patriots on the job this runs into a lot of money.

RETIRED FARMERS

An unknown "retired" farmer has the following to say for his kind. It hits the nail on the head. The retired farmer has earned everything that he has and deserves much more than he gets. He says:

"When I read in the papers and hear speakers tell that retired farmers are no good I get pretty mad. Maybe we are no good on the farm. The young folks don't want us around in the way. What are you going to do with us? I suppose you think maybe we ought to be "Solerized." Maybe we wouldn't be any good in Heaven and possibly we'd be too green to be any good in the other place. What made your towns? You say your railroads, your factories, your merchants. Let me tell you. First us old fellows (we weren't so old then) came onto the land cleared it, broke up the sod, built houses and barn and school houses, rode in lumber wagons, lived on corn pone pork, worked 16 hours a day and saved our money. Then the railroad came, and towns were built because we needed them. Factories were started. Everything prospered but we pioneers opened the way. Now we are crippled up with rheumatism, mother can't ride six or eight miles to church and we are going to town. We are going to sit in the park and hear the band play and watch the people go by and be just as lazy as we want to be. Maybe we will get fat and die in a few years. A year or two doesn't make much difference with us. Our usefulness anywhere in town or out in the country is about over. We have worked hard, suffered privations, saved up what little we had gotten and we are not very free to let go of it. Rubber plantations, mining stock or automobile factories don't appeal to us. We pay our way and it seems we are safe citizens, if not enterprising ones. Bear with us as you would with a faithful old horse or dog for the good we have done, and remember that old people do not change their ways as readily as younger ones, but we are just as sensitive to slights and slurs.

Aunt Sally's Letter

To the Readers of
The Walkerton Telescope

Dear Friends:—

What do colors mean to you? The colors around us effect us whether we know it or not. The beautiful fresh green grass and trees will soon cast their influence about us. Green is a restful color. It isn't only the warm Spring breezes that makes us relax our energies. It is the sudden change from the glaring snow to the soothing restful green around us.

Lucile the clever designer of women's fashionable clothing, took much pleasure in decorating each room in her apartment with a color that harmonized with the use she intended to make of the room.

The hall is a vivid turquoise green with every bit of furniture and hangings and carpet of the same hue; the ceiling is vivid blue. These colors stand for success and loyalty.

Her bedroom is rose color—not that mind you, but rose, real rose. The walls are hung with filmy gauze, rose taffeta curtains drape the windows, and wreaths of silk roses are everywhere. The furniture is lemon and pale blue. These colors vibrate joy, love, wisdom and health.

The dressing room, which is entered from this room, is of palest sky blue, a blue with a slight tint of mauve which means pure happiness.

The sitting room is all dull grey with bluish walls. It's effect is peaceful and restful.

The music room has green and grey walls, with glints here and there on the greenish-grey furniture of every one of the other colors; the curtains are black toile de Jouey trimmed with green and decorated with blue-birds on leafless branches. When lit up at night the room has the gayest and most delightful vibrations which make you dance and sing and laugh.

The language of color is too often disregarded. In choosing our new wall paper and paint let us keep in mind what effect the color is likely to have on us. Lucile made some happy selections, don't you think so?

Faithfully yours,
Aunt Sally,
Walkerton Telescope,
Walkerton, Ont.

Potatoes Frozen

Asked if there was a probability of potatoes taking a drop in price a local grocer declared his belief that there would be no drop. It was stated that thousands of bushels of potatoes which had been stored in pits during the winter had been ruined by the frost, and this loss militated against any reduction in the price.

Miss Truax, Mrs. Rowland, Mrs. Ramsey and half a score of others of our women whom you will remember as being active in war work in your time, are now running the schools and sitting at Town Council. Mere men have to toe the scratch these times, my boy. For instance, our old friend, Wig McKay, wanted to be Mayor this year, but his wife wouldn't let him. He has to stay home and mind the little flock, while she goes to attend the School Board. It's a poor husband nowadays that won't stay home every Tevening and finish up the housework while his wife is attending a Board meeting or gossiping a couple of hours down town. Bill, I would like to tell you about a lot of the improvements around town but it would make this letter too long. One thing you would admire if you came back would be the churches. We have just the three now instead of seven, but all are in a flourishing condition. The preachers get a living salary (and would you believe it, it is never overdue) and the funds of the Churches are well-kept up. The money that was saved by getting together is now available for missionary and other enterprises. As far as we can tell the Church is stronger in every way under the new conditions and a greater force for good in the community.

I know you are anxious to know if Denny Phalen is still Reeve of Greenock, and a score of other things, but if I don't stop I'll get writer's cramp and you'll get a headache. So long for the present, Bill.

Yours,
Old Timer.

Expensive Load of Hay.

Not so many years ago, Andew Sanderson, a farmer in the township of York, took a load of hay one autumn to Toronto to sell in the open market. Finding no sale, and unwilling to take the load back with him over very heavy roads, he offered it to the proprietor of Elgin's Hotel on Yonge Street, who offered him in return the lot at north east corner of King and Yonge Sts., Sanderson reluctantly accepted. That lot was sold not long ago for a million and a quarter dollars.

Activities in Air.

LONDON, March 25.—In the past three days the British airmen have downed 154 German machines on the western and Italian fronts, and have lost 11. This does not appear to bear out the German claim of supremacy made in yesterday's official German report. A British official statement follows:

"A thick morning mist on Friday prevented our airplanes from leaving the ground during the early part of the day. When the mist cleared there was much activity in the air on one battle front. The enemy's low-flying machines were particularly accurate, engaging our forward groups with machine guns.

"The enemy's massed troops again offered good targets for our low-flying airplanes. The location and range of bodies of hostile troops and transport were reported to our artillery and successfully engaged.

"Eight and a half tons of bombs were dropped on hostile railway stations in the rear of the battle front and also on the enemy's billets."

Great Gas Attacks.

Canadian Headquarters in France, March 25. — While German and British troops were struggling far to the south in the opening clash of the spring campaign the greatest projector gas bombardment in the world's history was carried out by the Canadians last night against enemy position between Lens and Hill 70. Sharply at 11 o'clock a signal rocket gave notice of its beginning. A moment later over five thousand drums of lethal gas, simultaneously released from projectors, were buried into enemy territory from the outskirts of Lens to Cite St. Auguste and Fosse de Dix Huit. From his front line and strong points favoring winds carried the poisonous clouds back upon the enemy's dugouts, supports, reserves, and assembly areas. The whole front was lit up with enemy flares, which could be dimly seen through the heavy mist, while the men in our lines could hear the enemy's gas alarm and cries of distress from the hostile trenches.

British Miners In Line.

LONDON, March 25.—It is understood that the Miners' Federation has accepted the Government's proposal regarding the combing out of men for military service.

The federation passed a resolution advising the men not to resist the combing out of 50,000 men from the mines, in view of the fact that the ballot taken by the miners did not show a two-thirds majority against the proposal.

NEW YORK, March 25. — Karl Tucker, who served as secretary to Horst von Der Goltz who organized the expedition to blow up the Welland Canal in Canada, was arrested here as a dangerous enemy alien.

HOG PRODUCTION

It is a matter of the greatest importance that Canada should increase her production of BACON HOGS and other live stock there is at present a world-wide shortage of meat. Good markets for some time to come are assured.

THE CANADIAN BANK OF COMMERCE will gladly make loans to assist farmers in good standing to acquire live stock.

The Most Artistic Roof

is the one that completely harmonizes with the design and finishing of the house. For this reason there is a steadily increasing demand for Brantford Asphalt Slates for the modern style of homes.

Brantford Asphalt Slates have a surface of crushed slate embedded into our asphalt coating, the base of the roofing being felt saturated with asphalt. They are cut the size of shingles, and their beautiful soft colors of reddish brown and dark green give a roof a most artistic appearance. The colors are the natural shades of the slate as it comes out of the quarries. Brantford Asphalt Slates are, therefore, unfadeable —never require painting.

Brantford Asphalt Slates

are accurate in size and pliable, which makes them very easily handled and quickly laid, saving time and labor, and therefore costing less to lay.

Brantford Asphalt Slates make an artistic, durable and economical roof. Booklet describing them mailed on request.

The death summons came very suddenly to Mr. Henry Irwin of Belmore. One morning recently his neighbors did not notice the smoke rising from his chimney as usual, and at once became alarmed, so entering the house they found the old gentleman dead in his bed. Hog Prices Step Up

Live pork took quite a jump up on Tuesday, without anything to warrant it except the competition between the drovers and the farmer's clubs. There are now three of these clubs organized in this section—at Williscroft, in S. S. No. 16 Bruce and S. S. No. 8 Greenock & Elderslie. For the first time the members there delivered hogs at Paisley on f. o. b terms to the packing firm, also handling others than they themselves had to deliver. Result, higher bids from the drovers, and the price went up to $19.65. Should the farmers stick together on the hog-selling scheme, the co-operative system is bound to develop to other branches of the live stock business. It is a case of the producers attempting to remove one of the toll gates on the highway of trade between themselves and the consumer. As this is abundantly evident to those who have been engaged in the trade for years, there will in all probability be something of a fight for who is going to handle the hogs in the future.—Paisley Advocate

"THE AVERAGE T.P. COUNCIL."

The Saturday Night, in reference to the recent municipal contest for Mayoralty of Vancouver, says: "The entire campaign centered around a trival incident which would not hold the attention of the average tp. council for 15 minutes."

We have often been amused at the views expressed by city papers anent rural municipal bodies. One would imagine from their writings that only in large centres are real brains to be found. After an experience of nearly a decade we desire to state that "the average township council" measures up to that of any city or town council we know. They meet once a month, and do their busines honestly and well. Their meetings are orderly and conducted in a gentlemanly manner. We have yet to report one council meeting where the members have lost their heads and called one another vile names that from time to time appear in the reports in the metropolitan press. Toronto city council for years has been a joke. The transaction of its business has at times almost developed into a bear garden with a free fight only averted by a few cool-headed men. The same may be said of many other cities. Why is it that the city press try to convey the impression that rural municipal councils lack brains or business ability? The only answer is that they lack first-hand knowledge of the working of such bodies. If they were present at some of their meetings they would find that courtesy, good breeding and respect for one another were the dominant features of their meetings. Also they would find intelligence exercised in dealing with all questions before them. We will back "the average township council" against any of the city or town councils we know, for more honesty of purpose and more gentlemanly conduct in public business than any of them.—Kincardine Reporter

GET READY FOR GARDEN

How to Plan Your Work and Work to a Plan.

EVERYBODY GROW EATABLES

The Essentials in Planning Garden—Best Varieties to Plant.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

AT NO TIME in many years has the necessity and importance of the home vegetable garden been so clearly shown as for this coming summer. France, our wonderful ally, has since the French Revolution been a nation of small farmers, her people of small means cultivating some available land to produce a portion of their own household foodstuffs and to increase the wealth of the nation. Great Britain, threatened with a shortage of foodstuffs, determined to cultivate all available land possible to offset this shortage and we, in Canada, bending every energy toward facilitating these great nations should do all in our individual power to do something in the hope of helping ourselves and assisting the commercial vegetable growers who are seriously handicapped by the shortage of labor in the production of vegetable foodstuffs. Every city, town and village dweller has an opportunity to help in this great work, in that there are hundreds of available plots now practically unproductive, which could be made grow vegetables and thus add to the wealth of the country.

Vegetables an Important Food.

Vegetables should form an important portion of the daily food of the average human being, for they possess qualities which we are told are essential in the proper digestion of the heavy foods, such as meats.

All backyards cannot be prepared in one year to grow vegetables of an excellent quality. Some portion of the yard, however, may be devoted to this purpose, or, if it is convenient, there are usually many vacant lots which are not too far from one's place of abode which possibly could be devoted to the growing of vegetables.

Some Essentials.

First of all it is essential that the vegetable garden, no matter how small, be planted according to some plan or rule. No one attempts to build a house or to set out a perennial flower border without using some drawing or chart to go by. Why should the vegetable garden be treated differently? Haphazard planting will prove a failure, and in order to overcome this it should be remembered in laying out the garden that—

(1) Tall plants will be most effective if placed behind low ones, not intermingled with them.

(2) All plants closely allied should be grown together, not in the same row, but in rows adjoining one another.

(3) The fences may be decorated with vine crops which may be supported on the fences by means of strings or lattice work.

(4) All quickly maturing vegetables should be planted in a portion of the garden by themselves so that they may be harvested and the ground used for other crops later on.

Secure Seed Now—But Plant Only When Soil Is Ready.

The backyard gardener should decide very early which crops are to be grown and should purchase his seed as soon as possible. It must be remembered, however, that much of this seed may be wasted if it is planted too early in the season. The soil must be warm to receive the seeds, and amateur gardeners must have patience until it is certain that good growing weather has come. It is possible in ordinary seasons to plant some vegetables in April, and yet many backyard vegetable enthusiasts will be well advised to wait until the middle of May before doing very much in the garden.

Suitable Varieties.

A list of varieties suitable for gardens made by city, town and village dwellers follows:

Spring Wheat Seed for Ontario

The world demand for wheat in 1918 justifies the greatest possible effort towards increased production. The small acreage of Fall Wheat put in last Fall will mean increased acreage in Ontario available for Spring Wheat. The Ontario Government is co-operating with the farmers in order to provide seed. It has purchased 60,000 bushels of No. 1 Marquis Spring Wheat Seed through the Seed Branch of the Federal Department of Agriculture. More will be purchased if necessary to fill needs.

DISTRIBUTION—Seed is sold only in 2—bushel bags. Carloads will be placed at certain points in the Province where less than carload orders can be filled.

WHERE TO BUY—Purchases may be made either in the warehouse at the distributing points, or orders may be placed with nearest District Representative of the Provincial Department of Agriculture, or they may be sent direct by mail to the Markets Branch, Department of Agriculture, Parliament Buildings, Toronto.

PAYMENT IN CASH—Price is $2.74 per bushel at all local stations. In all cases, without exception, cash must accompany order. Send remittance by marked check, postal note, post office or express money order made payable to Ontario Department of Agriculture, Markets Branch.

ORDER EARLY—In the event of the requirements of the Province being under-estimated, there may not be enough seed to go around. It is advisable in order to insure having their orders filled that purchasers should place orders as soon as possible. All orders are subject to confirmation and will be filled in the order received. As seed is delivered in 2—bushel bags, order should be for even numbers of bushels, and no order for less than 2 bushels can be accepted.

HOW HE WON THE D. S. O.

Lieut.-Col. Fraser was Highly Commended for his Good Work at Vimy and Hill 70

Walkerton people were glad to learn recently that Lt.-Col. (Dr.) Fraser had been decorated by King George for his good work at the Front, while in command of No. 2 Can. Field Ambulance Corp. We are glad to be able to give to our readers the official report upon which the award of honors was based. It speaks for itself. The report follows:—"Lieut.-Col. Fraser has been an indefatigable worker and has brought his Unit to a very high state of efficiency. During the operations from April 9th to May 4th at Vimy Ridge this officer personally supervised the clearing of wounded from the left of 1st Canadian Division front. He showed sound judgment and initiative under trying conditions. He personally conducted bearer parties to the Regimental Aid Posts in spite of at times extremely heavy shell fire, his coolness under these circumstances always rendering an inspiring example to his men. In the Hill 70 operation of August 1917, this officer again took charge of the evacuation of wounded from the left front. In spite of tremendous difficulties caused by the tram lines temporarily put out of commission, and the use of gas shells by the enemy—he successfully kept all the posts clear, the wounded being evacuated in a remarkable period of time."

Fell Into Flooded Creek

Mrs. Amos Miller, West Ward, had an exciting experience on Saturday evening. She was getting a pail of water out of Silver Creek when the soft ground she was standing on suddenly gave way and precipitated her into the water. In the present flooded condition of the creek it is quite deep at that point and Mrs. Miller was carried a couple of rods by the swift current before a neighbor who witnessed the incident rescued her in a half-drowned condition.

Stole From Employer

On returning to business after a couple of month's illness this week, Mr S. A. Rife discovered that his head cutter had been taking advantage of his absence to engage in wholesale grafting. Suits for parties at Hanover were made and paid for without going through the books. In one case a bunch of overalls from the factory were sold to a customer at Ayton at a reduced rate and the cheque pocketed by the cutter. On Wednesday morning Mr. Rife swore out a warrant for the arrest of the man for stealing. He was arrested by Chief Ferguson, taken before Magistrate Tolton and remanded for a week. Afterwards a search was made of his house and several bolts of tailoring cloths were found. The cutter had been in the employ of Mr. Rife since a year ago last August. He has a wife and family of three children but has been receiving high wages.

TWO SIDES

When you're busy, busy working,
In your tense industrious way,
Does it cheer you if a neighbor
Comes to interrupt your labor.
Just to pass the time away,
Just to pass the time of day?
Does it cheer you, Is he welcome?
Do you love him fondly?
Say!
Then when he is busy working,
In his tense industrious way.
Why should you stop short the labor.
Of your brisk industrious neighbor,
Just to pass the time away?
Just to pass the time of day?
Will he welcome your intrusion?
Will he love you fondly?

Where Walkerton Loses

Rope-making machinery which has been lying idle for years in the old Binder Twine factory was recently shipped to Fergus and set up in the factory of Beatty Bros., where it is busy making lots of rope and a good profit for its owners. It is a pity that this machinery couldn't be kept in Walkerton and operated here. What seems to have stood in the way is the fact that the present owner of the old building, Mr. Henderson Black of Montreal, wants $15,000 for it, which in the opinion of the owners of the plant is a terrific price for a building that has closed down for years. The property is assessed for $12,500 and brings the town about $400 a year taxes. And as a factory building which would make a fine home for a live industry, continues to be a dead horse.

BREAKING UP OF 160TH

Bruce Battalion Though Now a Thing Of The Past Must Never Be Forgotten, Writes Capt. R. B. Whitehead

How the boys of the 160th feel [illegible] the old Bruce Battalion which suffered the common fate of all the units of the 5 th Division in being broken up, is told in a letter by Capt. R. B. Whitehead written to his mother, Mrs. Jas. Whitehead before he left for France. We have been priveleged to publish some extracts which we are sure our readers will appreciate:—

Witley Camp,
February 27, 191[illegible]

As you doubtless already know the glorious 5th. Division is an organization of the past. A group of highly trained Canadian Battalions that existed away back in the year 1916-1917, but was broken up and cast to the four winds of heaven on February 22nd 1918, to supply reinforcements to Battalions in France already depleted in numbers. The 160th. was one of the units to be broken first. On Saturday last practically half of the Battalion (that has stuck together as unit for the past two years) was sent unto the 4th. Reserve. Bramshott, to be absorbed by that unit as reinforcement. The remainder of the Battalion is sending drafts to France very shortly. Luckily all our men are going to Western Ontario Battalions now in France and one Western Canada Battalion as pioneers.

There are seven officers going to France, these being the captains (including myself). We get the privilege of going over holding our rank instead of reverting to rank of lieutenants. I myself am going to the 18th Battalion from Winnipeg. We don't know definitely just when we will go but expect it will be very soon. Tom Cameron went across on Monday last to the 2nd. Pioneers. Mack Mundell reverted to lieutenant and went across at the same time to the 1st. Battalion. If ever there is a conscientious officer Mack is the one, and if there is ever a call for a nasty job, Mack will be one of the first to volunteer. He is also the kind to sit up all night too, to see that his men are well cared for. I was mighty sorry to see him go. He turned out that he was the first of the officers to go to France. It sure has been a long time since I have had to contend with a lump in my throat as when the crowd moved off our parade grounds on Saturday with the officers to go to the 4th. Reserve at Bramshott I was bidding good-bye to the Sergeant Major, who has always been my right hand man and when the tears welled up in his eyes and he couldn't speak but simply turned and walked away, it certainly did affect me. However these are all the misfortunes of war to be borne sooner or later.

The Quarter-master is remaining behind here to get things cleared up and will then go to the reserve. He is quite worried as to what his ultimate fate will be, for not being a combatant officer it will be harder to place him than the others.

This surely has been a wonderful Battalion. Recruited all in Bruce County, made up principally of farm boys with very little idea of military discipline, they have surely acquitted themselves like real soldiers. Their splendid record of discipline has been truly marvellous. During the past year there was not one District Court Martial Case in the Battalion while in every one of the other Battalions in the Division there have been not less than five and in some cases as high as 23 cases in the year 1917. That truly is an enviable record. Every man in our Battalion was placed on his honour and punishments meted out were never very heavy. There really was never any necessity for severity except in isolated instances. The Battalion during the past year has made a name for itself in many different branches. The Brigade Officer told me personally that they had less trouble with our Orderly Room than any other in the Brigade. We won the Canadian Military Championship; we put on the best guard in the Brigade and taken from all sides I really don't think there was another Battalion in the 5th Division that was our equal in many different lines. Officers from other Battalions in the Division have told me on different occasions that our Battalion was at all odds the best marching Battalion in the Division. Forgive me, Mother, for tooting this horn so loudly but the 160th Battalion, although now a thing of the past, must never be forgotten. There must be a permanent place in the Canadian Archives for the history of the men from Bruce, who came to England in October 1916, to fight in the great war. This time next month there will be many men of the 160th who will be doing their bit in the front line, and I know that wherever the boys go they will acquit themselves just as creditably as the seasoned veterans.

Miss L. J. Watson-Treasurer E. G R.C. wishes to acknowledge the receipt of cheque for fifty-dollars from Brant Council.

In order that there might be some news to put in the Eden Grove column, John Seiler let a horseless sleigh run over him as he was taking it down the runway of his carriage shop. We regret that John really did more than was necessary for this purpose. So thoroughly did he do it that we are sincerely sorry to report that he cut his hand severely, hurt his back and stiffened one knee. We trust he will soon recover from his injuries.

The day was warm and the sun shone down from a gloriously blue sky onto my side verandah where I lay drinking in the sunshine. A blackbird seeking its mate lighted on a tree not far away! Soon another made its appearance and then a pretty love scene was enacted consisting of much twittering and hopping, up amid the swaying limbs. While I gazed lazily at them, I became drowsy and dreamed a dream.

I dreamed a mother wood-pecker, arriving from the sunny south to secure its annual mate and make its little nest had been attracted by the shelter of the same tree. Soon another male woodpecker returning for his third season in sunny Eden Grove had arrived and commenced pegging away at the bottom of the trunk making a great howdy-do to show the birdie above what a great worker he was. So industrious did he peg away that soon the tree fell with a crash. It didn't frighten the mother woodpecker but she hopped about frantically to please her proud gallant. The latter to complete his conquest snatched a feather from her tail and holding it in his mouth played the protestant boys with a sound for all the world like a fife. The subjugation of the mother woodpecker was complete and they both flew away together just as the sun was hidden behind a cloud and the chill wind of March woke me from my slumber.

It is expected there will be a euchre drive given by the Red Cross Ladies some time during the Easter festivities.

An exchange says that one trouble with this world is that there are too many people who will not cast their bread upon the waters unless they are assured that it will come back to them in a few days a full-grown sandwich all trimmed with ham, butter, and mustard.

Because witnesses at the Spring Assizes, at Woodstock were not paid large enough fees to suit them, every one but one refused to take what was offered and returned unpaid and angry to their various homes in Toronto, London, Petrolea, Tillsonburg and Ingersoll.

"The line's busy" is the almost invariable answer from Central when we ask for a subscriber on one of the rural lines. When a man is busy it makes him say naughty things to have to wait half an hour for some one to explain to a neighbour the best time in the moon to make soft soap.

A deaf old lady of obvious Scotch lineage entered a store to do some shopping. "What's the price of this silk?" she asked of the young shopman. "Seven shillings" was the reply. "Seventeen shillings!" she exclaimed. "I'll give you thirteen." "Only seven shillings, ma'am is the price of the silk," replied the honest shopman. "Oh, seven shillings!" rejoined the old lady sharply, "Well, I'll give five."

The Telescope inadvertently quoted the commercial lighting rate for Walkerton incorrectly in last week's paper. The commercial rates are;—10cts. per k. w. for an amount equal to 30 hrs use of connected load. 5cts. per k. w. for the next 70 hrs. use of connected load and all additional consumption at 2cts per k. w. Minimum monthly bills, 50cts. for each 100 watts of connected load. Minimum 50cts. per month. Prompt payment discount 10%.

Poor Run of Sap.

Mr. James A. Garland, the Brant maple syrup king, tells us that in spite of the mild weather the sap run has been very poor so far this season. Mr. Garland has 1300 trees tapped but has not realized much of the sticky stuff yet.

Power Plant Nearing Completion

The large addition to the power plant at Eugenia Falls is rapidly nearing completion and the building will be ready for the new dynamos within a few weeks. The addition is larger than the original building and is of very substantial construction. When completed and the new machinery installed the capacity of the plant will have been at least doubled. At present the plant is developing about 2500 horsepower and with the additional water wheels and dynamos this will be increased to approximately 6000 horsepower, a total that would provide all the power used at the present time in the County of Grey, including railways, factories and the power necessary to provide electric light for every present user. The increased development will undoubtedly result in a very considerable lowering the cost to the consumer and will tend to increase the amount of electricity in general use as a motive power. At present the cost of power and light under the Hydro system does not show a saving as compared with the old steam plant, but when the increased production and distribution has reduced the present heavy overhead charges to a proportionately small amount, power ought to be sold here as cheaply as it is in Toronto and much cheaper than in Guelph. It is expected that the new addition will be in operation before the end of 1918 and will possibly be ready to take over the extra heavy work of the fall and winter months.—Owen Sound Sun.

WHERE ORCHARDS PAY

Most Profitable Near Cities When Market is Convenient.

LABOR IS THE BIG PROBLEM

No Province or State in North America Has So Large an Area Suitable for Apple Growing as Has Ontario.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

THIS QUESTION will be discussed under four heads: Climate, Soil, Labor and Transportation.

The Factor of Climate.

So far as climate is concerned apples can be grown commercially in any part of old Ontario, south of a line drawn from Parry Sound to Ottawa; in fact, there are commercial orchards producing fruit at a profit considerably further north than this. Many people think of commercial apple orchards as being necessarily confined to the milder parts of the province, and to the lake districts, but the fact is worth emphasizing that we have varieties of apples suitable for commercial culture in every county of old Ontario. The winter hardiness of the many varieties grown throughout Ontario is now very well established, and it is possible to select varieties which will be hardy for any district.

The most serious climatic difficulty in the Province of Ontario is the occurrence of late frost in spring, and early frost in fall. Other difficulties of a climatic nature can be largely overcome by the selection of suitable varieties, or by careful discrimination with regard to soil, exposure, aspect, etc. It may be pointed out, however, that frosts are more common and more severe over large areas of flat country, than where the topography is rolling and hilly. Large areas of some of the southern counties of Ontario are, therefore, more or less unsuited to commercial apple orcharding because of their flat character. A more rolling country is much to be preferred, so that orchards can be made safer from frost by the better air drainage afforded.

The choice of varieties for various districts will be made the subject of later notes.

Suitable Soil In Every County.

So far as soils are concerned, it may be stated that there is an abundance of land in every county suitable for apple growing. Well drained land is essential for successful orcharding, and there is plenty of soil of this type to be had in almost every district.

Summing up Soil and Climate, it may be said that no province or state in North America has so large an area so favorable in soil and climate for apple growing as has the Province of Ontario. If this statement is true it becomes obvious that the present distribution of apple orchards in Ontario is dependent on other factors.

Most Profitable Near Cities.

Transportation is the most important factor having to do with the distribution of commercial apple orchards in Ontario. In other words, the commercial apple orchards are located within reach of transportation facilities, and the better facilities have been with relation to large cities and to the developing markets of the prairies, the more rapid has been the development of commercial orcharding. A location near a large city may be desirable, but if better soil and climate are to be found at a distance, a more distant location is likely to be preferred, provided transportation facilities are good.

Some districts in Ontario possess excellent conditions of soil and climate, but lack the facilities in transportation facilities, and until facilities are available little development can take place in commercial orcharding.

Labor Situation Very Acute.

At the present time the labor situation is acute, and is rendered more so from the standpoint of the apple grower by virtue of the emphasis which, very correctly, is being placed upon the production of exportable food stuffs. The labor shortage will result in the majority of small orchards being more or less neglected. But the large commercial grower of apples has been in difficulty for years over the matter of labor supply. For commercial orchard operations on a sizable basis, it is necessary to be within reach of a temporary supply of labor for apple picking. Otherwise it becomes necessary to build dwellings for men and their families so that a supply of labor may be always available.

The difficulties of the labor situation at picking time can be lessened considerably by the planting of varieties which ripen in succession, and by taking care to get the right proportion of each. A large area of one variety ripening at one time is extremely difficult to handle.—Prof. J. W. Crow, Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph.

The Fundamental Beekeeper.

In March the careful beekeeper will find a great deal to do in the way of preparing next season's supplies. All used appliances should be put in the best of shape and necessary new ones secured and prepared before the busy spring season arrives. New supplies necessary should be ordered at once. The beekeeper's papers are his barns, his bees are his harvesters, and given barns from they will harvest his crop with less risk of weather injury than farmers expect in almost any other crop. Without sufficient bees-room a percentage of the crop will be lost. Containers sufficient for the large crop that may be expected next season should also be ordered at this time. This applies particularly to present war-time conditions when supplies of material are uncertain.

Farm Produce Wanted

Lack of Food—threatens the Battle Line

ONTARIO.

"The food wanted by mankind does not exist.
The word 'shortage' is not strong enough.
The whole world is up against a nasty thing, familiar to the people of India, called 'famine.'"

—Lord Rhondda,
Britain's Food Controller.

One year ago, only the enemy was on rations.

To-day, Great Britain, France and Italy are on rations.

To-day, Germany controls the wheat lands of Roumania, Russia, Poland and Ukrania.

To-day, the shadows of hunger, famine, disease and death hang over the Allies.

Upon the 1918 crop from Canada and the United States depends the fate of the democratic peoples of the world.

If that crop is sufficient the Allies can be fed.

If that crop is not sufficient the Allies may have to accept a German peace.

That Battle-Line in France and Flanders Must Not Want

Do you realize what a German peace would mean to Canada?

Germany covets our natural resources—our agricultural and mineral wealth, our forests, our fisheries, everything that is Canada's.

Germany won't be satisfied with European territory, with teeming masses, wrangling factions and depleted natural resources. She wants colonies—big, thinly-populated countries in temperate zones for her sons and daughters to go to propagate their kind.

The Kaiser would sacrifice millions of Germans to-morrow if he thought that by so doing he could set foot on Canada's shores as Conqueror.

And what's more, the Germans would offer themselves for the sacrifice, so great is their subjection to the military ideal.

The only thing that balks German ambition is that battle line from the North Sea to Switzerland—and the British Navy.

The Only Thing That Sustains Our Men on Land and Sea—is Food

What are we, each one of us, prepared to do to insure that Food supply?

Germany, by her submarine campaign, has seen that great Armada, the British Mercantile Marine, shrink in volume.

Germany has seen South America, Australia, New Zealand, India and far away outposts of the Empire practically cut off from supplying food to the Motherland because of the lack of ships.

Forty million Allied men and women having been put on warwork, food production has dangerously decreased in Europe.

These forty million consume more food than when they were in ordinary occupations, and there are fewer men for farming. Hence an increased demand and decreased supplies.

The harvest of France was one-third less in 1917 than 1916, and this year must be smaller still, owing to lack of fertilizers, which cannot be supplied through shortage of shipping.

The world's decrease in live stock, as compared to 1913, is approximately 115,000,000 head.

Herbert Hoover Says:

"Our European Allies are dependent upon us for greater quantities of food than we have ever before exported. They are the first line of our defence. Our money, our ships, our life blood, and not least of all, OUR FOOD supply, must be of a common stock.

"In pre-war times, Britain, France, Italy and Belgium yearly imported more than 750,000,000 bushels of grain, plus vast quantities of meats and fats.

"The submarine destruction of shipping has made it necessary to abandon the hope of bringing food from South America, Australasia and India.

"Food must, therefore, be shipped from Canada and the United States—the nearest and safest route.

"Canadian and United States supplies are normally 350,000,000 bushels short of the Allied needs. By greater production and conservation Canada and the United States must combine to increase the export of grain by 150,000,000 bushels.

"The remaining shortage of 200,000,000 bushels must be overcome by greater reduction in consumption in the allied countries. And this is being done by Britain, France and Italy rationing her people.

"From two and a half years of contact with the German Army I have come out of the horror with the complete conviction that autocracy is a political faith and a system that directly endangers and jeopardizes the future of our race—that threatens our very independence. It has, however, been able to command complete inspiration of devotion and self-sacrifice in its people to the interest of their nation. The German farmer, in the name of the Fatherland, supports a nation two-thirds as large as the United States and threatens to subject the world from an area one-half the size of Ontario.

"My vision of War is not of an academic problem to be solved by discussion. To me it is a vision of brave, dying men and suffering women and children, for service on whose behalf the greater exertion of the Allies' farmers comes in a direct necessity and a direct plea. The Canadian and the United States citizen who sees war as I see it needs no inducement and no inspiration but the thought that every spade full of earth turned and every animal reared is lessening human suffering and guaranteeing the liberty of the world."

Lloyd George's Warning

"I fear the disciplined people behind the German Army, the rationed family and the determination of wife and sister and daughter and mother to stand and starve—so that their fighting men may be fed—I fear it more than the Imperial German Army itself."

Britain is now on Food Rations.

France is now on Food Rations.

Italy is on the verge of starvation. Only continuous support from us can enable us to hold out.

Only with a disciplined people behind can we hope to win. The rationed British Nation, blood of our blood, bone of our bone, are proudly paying the price and sharing with France and Italy their limited stock of food. For in this there is mighty pride, a conscious measuring of their glory with the best traditions of ancient Sparta, and of Imperial Rome, for Britons know that upon them rests the burden of saving humanity. The story of their service shall ring and echo forever along the hilltops of history.

The heart of this problem is labour.

Without more farm labour more food cannot be produced.

If you really want to serve your Country in a big, practical way, register now for farm labour, or urge and assist your male employees to do so.

To Send More Food to Our Allies is Not Charity

It is war. The Allies have a right to demand it. They have a right to resent the offer of only what is "left over." Those who are fighting the common battle for civilization and for our protection have a higher claim than had Lazarus, to only the "crumbs that fall from the rich man's table."

The Canadian people must recognize that our Allies have the first claim on our food supplies.

As the shipping situation makes the Allies dependent upon the North American continent for food, it is vitally necessary that Canada should increase her production of food in order to take a larger part in providing for the Allies' requirements. This is especially urgent as the maintenance of a large United States Army in the European field will cause a very heavy drain on that country's resources.

There must be no peace without victory.

For nearly four years Germany has been struggling against the powers of law and order. She has failed so far to make good her escape with her booty by superior strength and skill. And now she is attempting by intrigue, suggestion, device and propaganda to divert the attention of her antagonists from the struggle itself, and thus to gain her ends by relating the strength and skill of her antagonists.

What she can gain from these tactics is plain to all the world in the sorrowful experience of Russia.

Germany's most dangerous weapon is not her Zeppelin—that is obsolete. Not her submarine—that can be overcome. Not her machine-like army—that has been repeatedly hurled back by the living armies of freemen. Her most dangerous weapon is her propaganda of peace.

While with her hands she murders and despoils, with her voice she invites to parleys.

When Liberty is in Peril There is Threat of Lasting Disaster in the Very Word "Peace"

Lord Leverhulme, long known in Canada as Sir William Lever, who knows well the German mind, in a recent interview stated:

"You will never be able to dictate terms to Germany till she is beaten. The argument you mention is founded on the dangerous fallacy that because Germany is sick of this war she is sick of war in general. She isn't. I doubt if her Government is even sick of this war. You've read the speech of that old brigand, Hertling. Is there any sign of repentance in that speech? Is it a chastened speech? Is it the speech of a statesman who wants disarmament and a league of nations? No! Germany is back in her mood of 1914. She believes she is winning the war. She believes she has won now. And if we talk of peace to her she HAS won it. Why, it would be better a thousand times that every man in England should be dead than that Germany should issue from this war with the feeling of a conqueror. You hear people use the phrase, 'to the last man, and the last shilling,' and you think it is only a bit of rhetoric, but to my mind it's the most solemn and absolute truth. I mean when I say it that it would in very truth be a million times better for the people of these islands to be dead, every one of them, rather than live on as the serfs of a triumphant Prussia."

How can any lover of liberty remain insensible to this peril?

Food means Victory and the world made safe for democracy—

Lack of food means disaster and subjugation to Germany.

The Citizens of Ontario Must Lead This Mighty Crusade for Greater Food Production

They did it last year and will do it again.

As the greatest food-producing Province, Ontario must maintain her leadership in America. Great are our opportunities—our responsibility is tremendous.

Upon every man and woman, boy and girl, rests a personal obligation to serve. Every pound of food produced, in whatever form, is a contribution to the Cause of Freedom.

Ontario farmers should sow 500,000 acres of spring wheat.

Every Ontario farmer whose land is at all suitable should put an extra five acres into wheat, even at the expense of another crop.

What YOU Can Do To Help

At all costs production must be maintained.

That's why farmers and farmers' sons are being exempted from military service. Working on a farm is equivalent to service in the Second Line Trenches.

To enable the farm to do the work two factors are essential. The first is Time. Whatever we are to do must be done at once. Nature waits for no man. The second is Labor. Many farmers cannot plant the acres they would because they cannot get the necessary help. Many are afraid to increase their acreage because they fear they would not be able to cultivate and harvest an unusual crop after they had raised it.

The burden is not one to be placed solely upon the farmer. Neither can it be placed upon the townsman. It is a personal obligation upon every man, woman, boy and girl, in every farm, town and city home in the Province of Ontario.

AWAY WITH CRITICISM—CO-OPERATE! Mr. City Man, don't say that the farmer should do so-and-so, and thus allow criticism in this hour of our Nation's peril to cripple your effort.

Mr. Farmer, don't hastily underestimate the value the city man can be to you.

GET TOGETHER IN THE FIGHT FOR LIBERTY

Let us not lament what MIGHT be, but earnestly face what MUST be.

Fifteen thousand boys between the ages of fifteen and nineteen must be organized as "Soldiers of the Soil" to work on Ontario farms this season.

Farmers can get one or more of these boys by applying to the District Representatives or to the Public Employment Bureaux at Toronto, Ottawa, Hamilton or London.

Unmarried men, exempted from military service, are urged to take up farm work. Married men who have had previous experience on a farm are urged to resume farm work for a season. Employers of labor are asked to assist men to take up farm work.

We urge the farmer and the townsmen to get together for greater production in the interests of a free people and democracy.

Let the Organization of Resources Committee, your District Representatives of the Public Employment Bureaux act as your intermediaries.

When we have done our best, the cry for food cannot be wholly met.

For the rest—our Allies are tightening their belts.

CHAPTER II.

Gandis and Clematis.

"SEND that dog back!" William said resolutely. "I'm not going through the streets with a dog like that, anyhow!"

Genesis chuckled. "He ain' goin' back," he said. "Ain' nobody kin make 'at dog go back. I ain' had him mo'n two weeks, but I don' b'lievo pres'dent United States kin make 'at dog go back. I show you." And, wheeling suddenly, he made ferocious gestures, shouting, "G'on back, dog!"

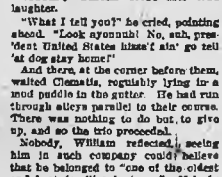
The dog turned, ran back a few paces, halted and then began to follow again, whereupon Genesis pretended to hurl stones at him. But the animal only repeated his maneuver.

"I'll show him!" said William hotly. "I'll show him he can't follow me!" He charged upon the dog, shouting fiercely. The hunted animal, abandoning his partial flights, turned a tucked under tail, ran all the way back to the alley and disappeared from sight. "There," said William, "I guess that'll show him!"

"I ain' bettin' on it," said Genesis as they went on. "He ner' did stop-follin' me yet. I reckon he the fol'lindest dog in the worl'. Name Clem."

"Well, he can't follow me!" said the surging William, in whose mind's eye lingered the vision of an exquisite dog-let with pink ribboned throat and a cottony head bobbing gently over a shiny sleeve.

"Name Clem fer short," said Genesis amiably. "I trade in a mandoline fer him what had her neck kind o' busted off on one side. I couldn' play her nobow, an' I found her, anyways. Yes, suh, I trade in 'at mandoline fer him 'cause always did like to have me a good dog. But I d'in' have me no name fer him, an' this here Bloole Bowers what I trade in the mandoline to, he say he d'in' have no name fer him. Say ner' did know if woz a name fer him 'tall. So I's spen' the evenin' at 'at lady's house. Funny, what used to be cook fer Mis Johnson, nex' do' you maw's, an' I set Fanny what am I gon' a do 'bout it, an' Fanny say, 'Call him Clematis,' she say. So 'at's name I name him, Clematis. Call him Clem fer short, but Clematis his real name. He'll come, whichever one you call him, Clem or Clematis, he ain' carin'!"



William's suffering eyes were fixed upon remoteness, and his lips moved now and then like a martyr's, pronouncing inaudibly a sacred word—"Milady! Oh, milady!"

Suddenly Genesis broke into loud laughter.

"What I tell you?" he cried, pointing ahead. "Look ayonnuh! No, suh, pres'dent United States hinn't ain' go tell 'at dog stay home!"

And there, at the corner before them, waited Clematis, regularly lying in a mud puddle in the gutter. He had run through alleys parallel to their course. There was nothing to do but, to give up, and so the trio proceeded.

Nobody, William reflected, seeing him in such company could believe that he belonged to "one of the oldest and best families in town." Nobody would understand that he was not walking with Genesis for the pleasure of his companionship until they got the tub—and the wash boiler, when his special condition must be thought—even more degraded. How frightful that this should befall him on anchus day, the very day that his soul had been split asunder by the turquoise shafts of milady's eyes and he had learned to know the real thing at last!

"Milady! Oh, milady!"

He let Genesis set out on the return trip from the second-hand shop, bearing the two washtubs, a clothes wringer (which Mrs. Baxter had forgotten to mention), the tin boiler, and followed by Clematis.

There was something really pageant-like about the little excursion now, and the glittering clothes boiler, borne on high, cast dashing lights far down the streets. The washtubs were old fashioned, of wood. They refused to fit one within the other, so William, with his right hand, and Genesis, with his left, carried one of the tubs between them.

Genesis carried the heavy wringer with his right hand, and he had fastened the other tub upon his back by means of a bit of rope which passed over his shoulder. Thus the tin boiler, being a lighter burden, fell to William's

"Walk faster! You got to walk faster!"

lot. The cover would not stay in place, but continually fell off when he essayed to carry the boiler by one of its handles, and he made shift to manage the accursed thing in various ways, the only one proving physically endurable being, unfortunately, the most grotesque. He was forced to carry the cover in his left hand and to place his head partially within the boiler itself and to support it—dilted obliquely to rest upon his shoulders—as a kind of monstrous tin cowl or helmet.

This had the advantage of somewhat concealing his face, though when he leaned his head back, in order to obtain clearer vision of what was before him, the boiler slid off and fell to the pavement with a noise that nearly caused a runaway and brought the hot checked William much derisory attention from a passing street car.

Seen from the rear, William was unrecognizable, but interesting. He appeared to be a walking clothes boiler, armed with a shield and connected, by means of a washtub, with a flegro of informal ideas concerning dress. In fact, the group was whimsical, and three young people who turned in behind it out of a cross street indulged immediately in fits of inadequately suppressed laughter, though neither Miss May Parcher nor Mr. Johnnie Watson even remotely suspected that the legs beneath the clothes boiler belonged to an acquaintance. And as for the third of this little party, Miss Parcher's visitor, those peregrinating legs suggested nothing familiar to her.

"Oh, see the fun-ee laundrymans!" she cried, addressing a cottony doglet's head that bobbed gently up and down over her supporting arm. "Sweetest Flopit must see too! Flopit, look at the fun-ee laundrymans!"

"Shh!" murmured Miss Parcher, choking. "He might hear you."

He might, indeed, since they were not five yards behind him, and the dulcet voice was clear and free. Willi-

in the shadowy interior of the clothes boiler were features stricken with sudden, utter horror. "Flopit!"

The attention of Genesis was attracted by a convulsive tugging of the tub which he supported in common with William. It seemed passionately to urge greater speed.

"Walk faster! You got to walk faster!"

"I got plenty time cat 'at grass befo' you' pa gits home," Genesis said reassuringly. "This here rope what I got my extry tub along to is 'nose' wo' gits thew my side."

Having stilled this protest, he continued to ambulate at the same pace, though somewhat assisted by the forward pull of the connecting tub.

The amusement of the second group having abated through safiety, the minds of its components turned to other topics. "Now Flopit must have his darlin' lickle ren," said Flopit's mistress, setting the doglet upon the ground. "That's why sweetest Flopit and I and all of us came for a walk instead of sitting on the nice, cool porchkins. See the sweetie toddle! Isn't he adorable, May! Isn't he adorable, Mr. Watson?"

Mr. Watson put a useless sin upon his soul, since all he needed to say was a mere "Yes."

Flopit, placed upon the ground, looked like something that had dropped from a Christmas tree, and he automatically made useful funny legs, somewhat longer than a caterpillar's, to pester after his mistress. He wagged these undergoing no particular

"You stop them, or I'll have you arrested!"

joy prostrate on the other side of it, but this, likewise, was something with in neither his duty nor his inclination to reveal.

"This here laundryman," said Genesis, resuming—"this here laundryman what own the dog, I reckon he mus' hopped on 'at street car what went by."

"Well, he ought to be arrested!" she said, and, pressing her cheek to Flopit's, she changed her tone. "Is mum's lickle heart a-beatin' so floppity? Then's own mummy make ums all right, um's precious Flopit!"

Then, with the consoling Miss Parcher's arm about her, and Mr. Watson even more dazzled with love than when he had first met her, some three hours past, she made her way between the fobs and passed on down the street. Not till the three and Flopit were out of sight did William come forth from the hedge. In silence then they resumed their journey. Clematis was waiting for them at the corner ahead.

That evening, at about half past 7 o'clock, dinner being over and Mr. and Mrs. Baxter (parents of William) seated in the library, Mrs. Baxter said:

"I think it's about time for you to go and dress for your Emerson club meeting, papa, if you intend to go."

"Do I have to dress?" Mr. Baxter asked plaintively. "I'm getting old enough not to have to, don't you think, mamma?" he urged appealingly. "When a man's my age"—

"Nonsense!" she said. "Your figure is exactly like Williamses. It's the figure that really shows age first, and yours hasn't begun to." And she added briskly, "Go along like a good boy and get it over."

Mr. Baxter rose submissively and went upstairs to do as he was bid. Ear after fifteen or twenty minutes, during which his footsteps had been audible in various parts of the house, he called down over the banisters:

"I can't find my evening clothes! They aren't anywhere in the house!"

"Where did you put them the last time you were there?" she called.

"I don't know!"

"All right; I'll come," she said, putting her clothing upon the table and rising. "Men never can find anything," she observed.

Search high, search low, no trace of Mr. Baxter's evening clothes were to be found. "Perhaps William could find them," said Mrs. Baxter, a final confession of helplessness.

But William was no more to be found than the missing apparel. William, in fact, after spending some time in the lower back hall, listening to the quest above, had just gone out through the kitchen door. And after some ensuing futile efforts Mr. Baxter was forced to proceed to his club in the accustomed suit of business.

As he passed the house of Mr. Parcher he noted the fine white shape of a masculine evening bosom gleaming in the moonlight on the porch. A dainty figure in white sat beside it, and there was another white figure present, though this was so small that Mr. Baxter did not see it at all. It was the figure of a tiny doglet, and it reposed upon the black masculine knees that belonged to the evening bosom.

Mr. Baxter heard a dulcet voice.

"He is indifferint, isn't he, sweetest Flopit? Seriously, though, Mr. Watson was telling me about you today. He says you're the most indifferent man he knows. He says you don't care two minutes whether a girl lives or dies. Isn't he a mean ole wicked sing, p'shaw Flopit?"

The reply was inaudible, and Mr. Baxter passed on, having recognized nothing of his own.

"These young fellows don't have any trouble finding their dress suits, I guess," he murmured, "not on a night like this."

Thus William, after a hard day, came to the gates of his romance, entering those portals of the moon in triumph. At one stroke his dashing raiment gave him high superiority over Johnnie Watson and other rivals who might loom.

* * * * * * *

William's period of peculiar sensitiveness dated from that evening, and Jane in particular caused him a great deal of anxiety. In fact, he began to feel that Jane was a mortification which his parents might have spared him, with no loss to themselves or to the world.

For one thing, her passion for bread and butter, covered with apple sauce and powdered sugar, was getting to be a serious matter. Secretly William was not yet so changed by love as to be wholly indifferent to this refection himself, but his consumption of it was private, whereas Jane had formed the habit of eating it in exposed places, such as the front yard or the sidewalk.

Mrs. Baxter was pleasantly engaged with a sprinkling can and some small flowerbeds, and Jane, having returned from various sidewalk excursions, stood close by, her hands replenished with the favorite food and her chin rising and falling in gentle motions. Upon this calm scene came William, plunging round a corner of the house, furious yet plaintive.

"You've got to do something about that child!" he began. "I cannot stand it!"

Jane looked at him dumbly, not ceasing, however, to eat, while Mrs. Baxter thoughtfully continued her sprinkling.

"You've been gone all morning, Willie," she said. "I thought your father mentioned at breakfast that he expected you to put in at least two hours a day on your mathematics and"—

"That's neither here nor there," William returned vehemently. "I just want to say this: if you don't do something about Jane I will! Just look at her! Look at her, I ask you! That's just the way she looked half an hour ago out on the public sidewalk in front of the house when I came by here with Miss Pratt! That was pleasant, wasn't it—to be walking with a lady on the public street and meet a member of my family looking like that? Oh, lovely!"

In the anguish of this recollection his voice cracked, and, though his eyes were dry, his gestures wept for him. Plainly he was about to reach the most lamentable portion of his narrative. "And then she hollered at me! She hollered, 'Oh, Will-ee!' to me!" he stormed. "Any body would think I was about six years old! She hollered, 'Oh, Will-ee,' and she rubbed her stomach and stuck apple sauce all over her face, and she kept hollering, 'Will-ee!' with her mouth full. 'Will-ee, look! Good! Bread and butter and apple sauce and dinner. I bet you what any bad sense

"Jane! look at her! Look at her, I ask you!"

"You did eat some the other day," said Jane. "You ate a whole lot. You eat it every chance you get."

"You hush up!" he shouted and returned to his description of the outrage. "She kept following me! She followed us, hollering, 'Will-ee!' till it's a wonder we didn't go deaf! And just look at her! I don't see how you can stand it to have her going around like that and people knowing it's your child! Why, she hasn't got enough on!"

Mrs. Baxter laughed. "Oh, for this very hot weather I really don't think people notice or care much about"—

"Notice!" he wailed. "I guess Miss Pratt noticed! Hot weather's no excuse for—for outright obesity!" (As Jane was thin, it is probable that William had mistaken the meaning of this word.) "Why, half of what she has got on has come unfastened, especially that frightful thing hanging around her leg! And look at her back, I just beg you! I ask you to look at her back! You can see her spinal cord!"

"Column," Mrs. Baxter corrected; "spinal column, Willie."

"What do I care which it is?" he fumed. "People aren't supposed to go around with it exposed, whichever it is, and with apple sauce on their ears!"

"Them is not!" Jane protested, and at the moment when she spoke she was right. Naturally, however, she lifted her hands to the accused ears, and the unfortunate result was to justify William's statement.

"Look!" he cried. "I just ask you to look! Think of it—that's the sight I have to meet when I'm out walking with Miss Pratt! She asked me who it was, and I wish you'd seen her face. She wanted to know who 'that curious child' was, and I'm glad you didn't hear the way she said it. 'Who is that curious child?' she said, and I had to tell her it was my sister. I had to tell Miss Pratt it was my only sister!"

"Willie, who is Miss Pratt?" asked Mrs. Baxter mildly. "I don't think I've ever heard of her."

Jane chose this moment to interrupt.

CHAPTER IV

Jane.

"WILLIE'S mashed on Miss Pratt," Jane said casually. "And she wears rats side curls. One almost came off. She's visitin' Miss May Parcher," added the deadly Jane. "But the Parchers are awful tired of her. They wish she'd go home, but they don't like to tell her so."

William became icily calm.

"Now, if you don't punish her," he said deliberately, "it's because you have lost your sense of duty!"

He turned upon his heel and marched toward the house. His mother called after him:

"Wait, Willie. Jane doesn't mean to hurt your feelings"—

"My feelings!" he cried, the iciness of his demeanor giving way under the strain of emotion. "If you stand there and allow her to speak as she did of one of the—one of the"— For a moment William appeared to be at a loss and the fact is that it always has been a difficult matter to describe the bright, ineffable divinity of the world to one's mother, especially in the presence of an inimical third party of tender years. "One of the"— he said, "one of the— the noblest—one of the noblest"—

Again he paused.

"Oh, Jane didn't mean anything," said Mrs. Baxter. "And if you think Miss Pratt is so nice I'll ask May Parcher to bring her to tea with us some day. If it's too hot we'll have iced tea, and, you can ask Johnnie Watson, if you like. Don't get so upset about things, Willie."

"Upset!" he echoed, appealing to heaven against this word. "Upset!" And he entered the house in a manner most dramatic.

"What made you say that?" Mrs. Baxter asked, turning curiously to Jane when William had disappeared. "Where did you hear any such things?"

"I was there," Jane replied, "at the Parchers'."

"Oh, I see."

"Yesterday afternoon," said Jane, "when Miss Parcher had the Sunday school class for lemonade and cookies."

"Did you hear Miss Parcher say"—

"No'm," said Jane. "I ate too many cookies, I guess, maybe. Anyways, Miss Parcher said I better lay down"—

"Lie down, Jane."

"Yes'm—on the sofa in the library, an' Mrs. Parcher an' Mr. Parcher came in there an' sat down after awhile, an' it was kind of dark, an' they didn't hardly notice me, or I guess they thought I was asleep, maybe. Anyways, they didn't talk loud, but Mr. Parcher would sort of grunt an' ack cross. He said he just wished he knew where he was goin' to have a home again. Then Mrs. Parcher said May had to ask her Sunday school class, but he said he never meant the Sunday school class. He said since Miss Pratt came to visit there wasn't anywhere he could go, because Willie Baxter an' Johnnie Watson an' Joe Bullitt an' all the other ones like that were there all the time, an' it made him just sick at the stomuck, an' he did wish there was some way to find out when ones was goin' home, because he couldn't stand much more talk about love.

"Then Willie an' Johnnie Watson an' Joe Bullitt an' Miss Pratt were always argufy' somep'n about love, an' he said Willie was the worst. Mamma, he said he didn't like the rest of it, but he said he guessed he could stand it if it wasn't for Willie. An' he said the reason they were all so—so terrible Miss Pratt was because she talks baby talk, an' he said he couldn't stand much more baby talk. He said he had the loveliest little sweetie-pie, but Mr. Parcher doesn't like it. He said he couldn't go anywhere around the place without stoppin' on the dog for Willie Baxter. An' he said he couldn't go in his own porch anymore. He said he couldn't stand the baby talk

DON'T "BREAK" COLTS

It Always Pays Better to Train Them for Work.

TRAIN EARLY TO HARNESS

The Collar Must Fit Well and the Food Be Right at First — Feed Must Be Increased in Proportion to Work Done.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

THERE ARE MANY colts approaching the termination of their third or fourth year, that are practically untaught, or as it is usually expressed "unbroken."

The too common practice of allowing such to go "unbroken" until such time as they are required to perform the functions of a horse in the spring, is irrational, and unfair to the animal. Colts should not be "broken," they should be taught or educated. In the unhandled or unbroken colt, the muscular, respiratory and nervous system (the organs whose functions are taxed in the performance of the ordinary functions of a horse) are weak and undeveloped from lack of function. Hence a regular course of preparation during the late winter and early spring months, when the time of both man and horse is not very valuable, should be given in order to have the colts in such condition when time becomes valuable that they will be able to perform a reasonable amount of work with satisfaction to the driver and safety to themselves.

The colt or colts should first be taught to wear harness and bridle by being allowed to run free for a few hours daily in a box stall or paddock, with the harness on. It is then good practice to match each with a steady, smart and good-natured horse, or if necessary a pair of colts together, and teach them to drive, obey the words of command, stand when asked to, etc.

When they have become reasonably handy without being hitched, they should be hitched to a waggon. Care should be taken to see that the harness fits properly. This applies especially to collars. The collars in which they are expected to work later on, should be worn. Each should have his own, and it should fit properly, not being too wide, so as to allow a rolling motion, nor yet sufficiently narrow to pinch at any point. The bearing surface should conform thereto in the vicinity of the neck and shoulder with which it comes in contact, except at the bottom, where sufficient vacant space to allow the introduction of a man's fingers should exist.

The colt or pair should be given daily exercise or light work, commencing with an hour or two the first day and gradually increasing the amount until they will be able to perform a full day's reasonable exertion without showing signs of weariness. The amount of grain given should also be gradually increased in proportion to the work or exercise given. By such usage the muscular, respiratory and nervous systems gradually gain tone, the muscles with which the harness, especially the collar, comes in contact, gradually become hardened and increased in power of resistance, hence become much less liable to soreness. In many cases, on account of this hardening of the muscles, they lose bulk, hence a collar that may have fitted perfectly at first may now be too large.—J. H. R., Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph.

Preparing for Gardening.

This month begins the active gardening work. Hotbeds should be made and the seed of the early plants like cabbage, cauliflower, early celery, early beets, and the long season plants like tomatoes, egg plants and peppers should be started. Many of these seeds for small gardening work may be started inside which will relieve the necessity of making hotbeds until the first part of next month. Manure for top dressing the ground may be hauled out the latter part of this month.

Hints For the Poultryman.

The flock should be given the opportunity to get out of doors and exercise on fine days. Begin to make preparation for hatching. Clean up the incubators and brooders, get boxes ready for setting hens. Do not set hens in the laying pens where other birds are running. If you want to raise more than 150 chickens consider the use of a good incubator and brooder. Usually chickens of the general purpose breeds hatched during the last week of March make the best winter layers. Where using hens for hatching dust them well with some good insect powder before setting, and again about two weeks later.

Feeding the Ewe.

On many farms lambs will begin to arrive about this time. If ewes have been liberally fed for a month before lambing they will likely have more milk. From ½ to 1 lb. of grain fed per ewe per day for a month before lambing is generally good practice, especially if ewes are somewhat thin. —Ontario Agricultural College Notes.

BRITISH CANADIAN HUSTLE IN U.S.A.

During one recent week in March the British and Canadian Recruiting Mission dispatched to Canada 1,089 volunteers for the British and Canadian armies. During the absence of Brigadier-General W. A. White, C.M.G., Col. J. S. Dennis, of the Canadian Expeditionary Force, is in command of the recruiting programme in the United States. Brigadier-General White is making a tour through the south in an effort to stimulate interest in recruiting.

The pictures accompanying this article illustrate the campaign that is being carried on in New York by the Mission. Brigadier-General White and Colonel Dennis have started a whirlwind campaign for recruiting Britishers and Canadians in the United States covering the next two months

Their ambition is to secure 20,000 men from the United States, if possible, before the terms of the draft convention between the United States and Great Britain become effective. During the eight months the Mission has been at work in the United States it has secured 22,000 volunteers for the British and Canadian armies, and has examined about 16,000 more.

Brigadier-General White has made the point that if a Britisher or Canadian desires to aid the Allies he can do so by promptly volunteering, because the machinery of the British and Canadian armies for training men has been so well developed by three and a half years of experience that it can train a man and put him in the firing line in five months. This has actually been done in quite a number of cases. On the other hand, the United States Government, starting much later, has had its hands full in training the first contingent of the draft, numbering about 700,000 men, and the second draft will follow close upon the heels of the first.

Does it Pay to Sell?

Their seems to be quite a movement of farmers west this year. In this district a number have held sales and got rid of their stock and implements at high prices. This seems to be a good year to sell. But what about these men when they come to equip themselves for farming again? Three or four thousand dollars may look good and feel good in hand, but it must be remembered the farmer is out of business and to get back into business it may be quite a costly affair.—Port Elgin Times.

Train Knocked Them Off Bridge

On Monday morning, 14 of Mr. G. G. Rennie's cattle got out and upon the C. P. R. track as the morning train came along. They kept ahead of the train until the trestle bridge over the Grand River near Belwood was reached. Here the locomotive struck the bunch, knocking them into the river some 30 or 40 feet below. Six were killed outright and the other eight so badly injured that they had to be killed. They were a choice bunch, several being ready to market, and the loss will be close to $1,500.—Fergus News-Record.

Real West Canadian Fur

THOSE who have never had the privilege of seeing a wild fox in the full glory of his winter clothing cannot begin to form a conception of the beauty of the dress. In the foothills and mountains of western Canada these animals reach practically the same perfection they do in the bitter cold of the Arctic. Some people claim they possess a more showy coat because they generally fare better.

The ordinary dweller of the cities pictures a fox as an indefinite red creature something like a wolf or a dog, but possessing a big tail. They know a fox is called red generally, but they do not know the shade. Those people who have seen foxes in cages also cannot appreciate the vast difference between the captive and the free.

The true wild fox in winter is a wonderful creature of soft blendings of bright reid, cream, the purest of white, the sharpest of black. Every hair shines with life and vigor, and the brush is a magnificent appendage which would make a true cross country fox-hunter kill an Irish hunter to obtain.

A splendid type of red fox trotted up the snow-covered ice of the headwaters of the Red Deer River in Alberta. He heard the sound of splintering shell-ice and he paused to listen. Far ahead some Stoney Indians, returning from their big annual game drive to the Clearwater and the Saskatchewan were crossing southward, their ponies laden with the meat of bear and deer and moose. They were bound for their homes in Morley, thirty miles distant, where they would sit in comfort in the warm log cabins for the remainder of the winter, ruing out perhaps only to feed their saddle horses or to pose in their blankets on the Canadian Pacific Railway platforms for the benefit of any tourists who might be travelling.

The fox took to the brush. It was high noon; clouds had rolled down from the peaks and soft new snow was falling. Crossing another bend of the river he came to a river flat where the body of a dead horse lay. He was as cautious as any fox but he was confident that no harm lay in the meat of this carcass because on the preceding night he had slunk by while coyotes made the darkness ring with their unpleasant bickerings over the feast. So, picking out a choice part of the neck he ate, and then went on.

But sometime during that morning a hunter in the district had "salted" portions of the dead animal. He had heard the coyotes at it and he had been waiting for just that development, knowing that after their caution had been blunted by one feed they would be back again and he would be able to barter some fur. He and by he came to inspect his "bait." He saw the fox tracks in the fresh snow and he followed, but not far. In a wooded dell where the spruces and birches gloomed and sparkled, at the foot of an open, snow-filled coulee he spied his catch. It was dead. Its toes turned up as is usual with the victims of strychnine. His shining red and white and black coat, its huge, soft brush, were as striking points of beauty as anything else in that ermine covered, green and silver studded spot of northern beauty. But the hunter was materialist. He was pleased because he had promised a girl in New York that when he returned home from his holiday in the foothill hunting country he would bring her some real Canadian fur.

Old Case Revived.

An old adage that the law never forgets was illustrated at the Spring Assizes on Monday when indictments issued twelve years ago were up for review before Judge Latchford. At that time two brothers of Kincardine Tp. charged with committing an atrocious assault on a young girl fled to the States. A recent report that they contemplated revisiting their old home, resulted in stirring the charge up again.

The Red Cross ladies on the 8th concession, Culross, held a social last week and realized $118. A feature of the evening was the auction of the season's first gallon of maple syrup, which ran up to $9.75. This was donated by J. Walker.

A British leather seller sent his bill to a shoemaker who owed him some money. One day the shoemaker was passing the shop. The man ran out and asked him if he had a the bill. Said the shoemaker: "I do all my business in parliamentary style. When I received your bill I gave it the first reading. In another fortnight I will give it the second reading, and very probably throw it out altogether."

Brother and Sister Called Suddenly

Miss Agnes Smith has had word of the sudden death of two former Walkertonians, Mrs. David Smith, and her brother, Paul Ross jr., both of Manitoba. Mrs. Smith died suddenly in Winnipeg while shopping in a store. Her brother was killed by the explosion of a tank. Their father, the late Paul Ross, was an ex-Mayor of Walkerton, and a prominent citizen of this town for many years. He at one time lived on the property at present owned by Mr. Joe Zettler, west of the town.

A One Tree Town

An old citizen pointed out to the Telescope the other day, that Walkerton has only one tree each of several well known varieties of trees. For instance, the only red oak in town is in Mr. William Van Horne's yard where it was planted as an acorn many years ago by the late Rev. Robt. Moffat, at one time pastor of Knox Church. The only white oak tree in town has quite an historic interest. It grew from an acorn planted by the late Miss Teasdale on her property where Mr. Claude Cooper now resides. She brought the acorn from Toronto where it had grown on a tree planted at the University grounds by the late King Edward VII on the occasion of his visit to Canada as Prince of Wales. Chestnut trees do not thrive in this neighborhood, but there is one, and only one, according to our informant. It is on Judge Greig's front lawn where it was planted a number of years ago by the late H. P. O'Connor M. P. P. The only butternwood tree in town grows on the Bend, north of the C. P. R. coal sheds. There was another tree of this variety on the Court House grounds, planted by the late Caretaker Richardson, but it was cut down to make room for the addition to the Registry Office.

Ice Goes Down

The ice above Truax's dam broke about two o'clock Friday afternoon and got away nicely. The Town Council had cleared the way for it on Thursday by clearing away the ice around the C. P. R. bridge. The worst jam in this district was at the 6th con. Brant where a couple of farms were largely under water and some of the livestock had to be hoisted from the stables to the floor above in the bank barns. The roadway was under water for a long distance until the ice jam broke on Sunday afternoon.

Died In California

Mr. Peter Ferguson, a former Walkerton lawyer, died at his home at Hollywood, Los Angeles, on Friday, in his 73rd year. Mr. Ferguson practised here as a young man, having an office in the quarters at present occupied by Dr. C. L. Grant. He left here about forty years ago to practise law at Winnipeg. He became quite well-to-do and a few years ago retired and removed to California. Up to the time of his death he kept up a steady correspondence with Crown Attorney Thos. Dixon.

Women's Societies Take Notice

We are informed by the County Treasurer that the applications for the County Grant to Red Cross and other Women's Societies making up material for soldiers' comforts have been so numerous that the amount set aside, for this purpose, ($12,000.00) is exhausted. As there are no more funds at present for this purpose, societies, must withhold making applications until the County Council makes further grant.

Old Trees Cut Down.

Many old trees in the town which have been landmarks for a generation or more have fallen victims to the axe this Spring. A fine old elm on Mr. Ed. Pengelly's property was cut down on Good Friday and measured 3 feet 1 inch across. The tree was planted by the late Mrs Pengelly 38 years ago and was a magnificent specimen. Of late years it grew very rapidly and was throwing too much shade. When cut up it yielded about five cords of stove wood. A hard maple in front of Mr. Wm. Taylor's house was cut down the same day. It was planted by Mr. Taylor himself 41 years ago and the trunk was about a foot and a half across.

Given Public Welcome

A public reception to two of Walkerton's returned heroes, Corp. Wilfrid Yack and Gunner Wm. Russell, who arrived home the early part of last week, was held at the Town Hall last Thursday night. Mr. John Rowland acted as Chairman and called upon a number of speakers including Revs. C. W. Cosens, Thos. Wilson, and J. W. Sanderson, Prin. Morgan, Mayor Johnston, and others. The usual gold pieces were presented to the boys, both of which made nice speeches in reply. Mr. Simon G. Sedgwick of Toronto, who has just returned from fighting at the Somme and is visiting his uncle, Rev. G. C. Rock, gave an interesting talk on experiences at the Front.

Given Thirty Days

The tailor who was charged with stealing goods from his employer, S. A. Rife, appeared before Magistrate James Tolton on Wednesday morning, pleaded guilty, was sent up for trial before Judge Greig. He was taken from the Town Hall to the Court House and tried summarily by Judge Greig, who sentenced him to serve 30 days in gaol, with the condition that the loss to his employer be made good. Crown Attorney Dixon appeared for the Crown and Lawyer A. E. McNab for the defendant.

On account of recent bereavement in the bride's family the affair was very quietly celebrated. Mr. and Mrs. Brocklebank, who have the heartiest wishes of a large circle of friends for a long life and happiness, will live on Mr. Brocklebank's fine farm on con. 4, Brant.

Colts Broke Loose

A team of colts belonging to Mr. J. T. Bell of Carrick broke loose from the Knox Church shed one morning last week, and badly smashed up the carriage and harness before their owner who was down town on business, happened along. One of the animals had got away and ran quite a distance but the other was stopped by a tree and when the owner arrived was tangled up in the remains of the harness. The carriage was also badly smashed.

Putting On The Lid.

License Inspector White went the rounds of the town the past week explaining to the grocers and druggists the latest amendment to the Ontario Temperance Act which certainly puts the lid on tight. Lemon Essence, Vanilla Extract, and all flavouring extracts which contain alcohol will be as hard to get after this as a drink of whiskey at a drug store. Extracts must be sold in bottles not larger than 2½ oz. and the grocer must write down in a book kept specially for the purpose the name and address of every purchaser and the date. The extract of ginger which has proved a great "joy producer" since the O. T. A. was passed, has been hedged around with regulations which make it as hard as possible to get it as a beverage. In the first place no one can sell it but druggists. In the second place, the customer must satisfy the druggist that he wants the ginger root for a legitimate purpose and in the third place the customer must take his oath before a magistrate that he requires the root for a legitimate purpose and that it will not be used as a beverage. If he can fulfil all these conditions, he can pay his money and get two ounces of the precious substance.

Death of Mrs. Grainger.

Mrs. John Grainger passed away at the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. J. Richardson at Kitchener on Monday, after a long siege of illness. She had been in poor health about two years and last Fall closed up her residence here and went to her daughter's home. At the time of her death, her daughter Nursing Sister Emma Grainger was on her way home from France in response to a cable sent a few weeks ago. Mrs. Grainger was almost a life-long resident of Walkerton, her late husband being a prominent citizen of the town. For many years he took contracts for plastering and had a part in the construction of most of the older buildings of the town. Later he was a partner in the brewery business for many years with the late Wm. Farquharson. Mrs. Grainger was a woman of fine character, and a life-long member of St. Thomas Church. A family of four sons and and three daughters are left to mourn a loving mother. They are:—Horace Grainger B. A. of Toronto; Dr. John, formerly dentist at the Sault, now Overseas; George of London; Walter, of the Royal Flying Corps now in training in Texas, Mrs. J. J. Richardson of Kitchener; Emma, Nursing Sister, at the front, Mabel at home. The remains were brought to Walkerton on the G. T. R. morning train yesterday. The funeral will take place from her late residence, West Ward on Friday afternoon.

Presentation Didn't Come Off

A serio-comic incident occurred a few miles out of town last week at which the neighborhood is still laughing. A farmer who had sold his farm was preparing to move to another section and the neighbors got busy and planned to give him a royal send off. A subscription was taken up through the countryside and a handsome present purchased to be given to the departing neighbor along with a nice address telling how much they all thought of him. As if this were not enough a feast was got ready to be given in his honor at the next farm. The night came, but in the meantime the river had risen to such a flood height that the roads were practically impassible. Not to be stopped in their scheme to honour their departing friend, the neighbors almost risked their lives by driving through the flood to get to the affair. When everybody had arrived and the extra chairs from all over the countryside, brought in to accommodate the crowd the festivities were ready to begin. A messenger was then despatched to the guest of honor to come on over. Here is where the messenger got a shock that nearly knocked him off his feet. The honored guest declined to be honored. He simply said "no" and that was all there was to it. He gave no excuse but just intimated that so far as propelling his presence one inch from his doorstep, there was nothing doing. When word got back to the assembled company some of them, when they had got over their astonishment, were inclined to be furious. Then their funny bones got working and helped a bit to relieve their outraged feelings.

Resigns Owing To Illness

Rev. D. A. Walker B. A. formerly pastor of the Methodist Church, has again resigned his pastorate at Preston owing to ill-health. Mr. Walker wished to withdraw from the work last summer but was prevailed upon to continue. It now appears that his condition is such that he will have to leave the work definitely if he is to regain his health. His many friends here hope to have better news soon of his condition.

160th Soldier Killed

The first death in action among the boys of the 160th since they went to France last month in various drafts, occurred on March 23rd, when Norman Farquharson, elder son of Mr. John Farquharson, town clerk of Teeswater, died of wounds in a military Hospital. Norman was a fine strapping young man, resembling very much his father in build. He was well over six feet in height, his big physique enabling him to gain admission to the Battalion although he was considerably under age. Norman went to France to join the 2nd Pioneers early in March and had just been a few days on the firing line when he received his fatal wound on March 21st. Two days later he passed away and he now fills a hero's grave in Flanders fields. Memorial service for this heroic young soldier was held at the Presbyterian church at Teeswater on Sunday.

Religious Side of Trench Life.

A large congregation was in attendance at the Baptist and Christian church on Sunday evening to hear Cpl. S. G. Sedgewick of Toronto who was visiting his uncle Rev. G. C. Rock speak on "The Religious Side of Life in the Trenches." Corp'l Sedgewick who has been invalided home after having been at the Front for some months with a Scottish regiment gave a very interesting talk on this phase of soldier life of which though much thought of by parents and others at home, very little is known. "The greatest evil" he said "with which Christian organizations have to contend, is the French 'staminet' or restaurant which have been established as near the lines as possible and which serve cigarettes, wine, rum, etc." To offset this evil there are organizations at work including the Y.M.C.A. which has huts and tents directly behind the lines and serve hot coffee and other soldiers' comforts to the men as they come out of the trenches. Besides the 'Y' there are the huts and tents of the Church of England Ministerial Association, the Catholic Ladies' Society and others, but the greatest of all these so far as the spiritual welfare of the average soldier is concerned, is the Y. M. C. A., which had even a greater influence for good through its meetings and song services than anything else. The speaker belittled the activities of the Chaplain of his regiment, which he said consisted of taking the men in charge after church parade on a Sunday morning when they were off duty and telling them to write home. Although there was little to uplift a man the standards of right-living instilled at home can easily be lived up to in the trenches. Cpl. Sedgewick urged his hearers to write regularly to the boys at the Front and to send parcels when possible, for he could not, even though he had been there, express the great joy which mail from back home brings to the hearts of the men and these letters, bringing thoughts of loved ones at home, are a greater asset making for their spiritual welfare than all other influences in one. In concluding the speaker answered several questions, among them being "Is it compulsory for the men in the trenches to drink the rum which is issued?" He did not think that it had come out in orders for he had not and he knew others who had declined to take the rum.

FARMERS CLUB WILL HELP

"Farmers' clubs will be a great boon to the sections of Bruce county that are organizing," said Mr. Norman McKay, District Representative, in an interview last week.

"The clubs will bring back to the farming life something which has been lost—the social part. True, the formation of Farmer's clubs means that the farmers will buy certain commodities as a club, and will sell their hogs and cattle as a club direct to the best market. But this should be taken as a sign that the farmer has got down to real business, and as he prospers so will the small towns prosper.

"Will the club idea mean the purchase by farmers in great quantities their household goods?"

"No," replied Mr. MacKay. "The club will quite likely take the cash of the farmers and ask local dealers for a cash price for seed for all its members, and probably also the same in the case of twine."

"The fact that the farmer is selling his own hogs and cattle is probably because he has not been satisfied with the prices he has been paid."

"The Farmers' club idea is spreading everywhere. The clubs are expected to meet monthly in the winter season: and programs of debates, etc., will be indulged in. If you want to have your rural community prosperous, and up-to-date to its methods, then there must be co-operation among the farmers. Bruce county has begun to gain in land values and values of farm animals, etc."

DRIVER IS LIABLE

The following appeared recently among the legal queries and answers in the Mail and Empire:

J. McK, Pinkerton—I was driving along the road in the night, and on account of the darkness I drove into the ditch and ran into a mail box post and broke it down and my vehicle was damaged and I was injured. Am I liable for breaking down the post box or can I claim damages for the injury to myself and my vehicle.

Answer—Of course, it may be said that you should have kept to the middle of the road, but this is one of those accidental occurrences which frequently happen without much blame being attributable to any person. It must be assumed that the rural post box was placed at the side of the road, under the authority and direction of the Post Office Department. The Post Office Department is one of the branches of the Dominion Government, and no one can sue a Government without its permission. No doubt you are liable for the cost, whatever it may be, of repairing the post and the box.

IF WE ADVERTISE OUR GIRLS

New York Life prints a clever skit to illustrate how an automobile salesman might go about it if he were advertising a marriageable girl:

Here is just the girl for a man with a moderate income. Her performance in the kitchen exceeds the bounds of belief: She will take any pile of dishes on high. Then too she has an abundance of power for washing and ironing. If desired to do so she can be made to fly about the house on cleaning day at the rate of sixty miles an hour! Besides having a wonderful flexibility of disposition, Marion is a truly silent girl—a low gentle hum being the only sound she makes while setting the table. Furthermore, she is dependable at all times; the unexpected arrival of company will never stop her. Her body lines are simple yet graceful—connoisseurs have called her "the most beautiful girl in America." Just the girl you would be proud of on the avenue or in congested traffic. Her cost of upkeep is astonishingly low. In addition to all these splendid qualities, she has that rare inner virtue which seems only to improve with age—Character! Marion will never go back on you!

Specifications! Blue eyes, red lips, milk-like skin, twenty-four-inch waistline, right-hand drive, genuine hair top, wrist watch siren and extra attire. Full price. One solitaire ring. Beautifully illustrated circular mailed free on request; or call up and arrange for demonstration chat in our new and luxuriously furnished reception room. Address, David Dealswinger. The Gasoline Gables, Flivver avenue.

A Ford Car Takes the Place of all These Things

WHEN you own a Ford you can do away with many articles that are a source of continuous expense to the man who still drives a horse. For instance, not only your driving-horse and buggy, but the single harness, blankets, whips, currycombs, brushes, horse-shoes, pitch-forks, feed-bins, etc.

In their place you have a speedy, dependable, dignified, roomy Ford Car—complete in itself. It is vastly superior to the narrow, cramped buggy that travels so slowly. And when a Ford is standing idle it does not eat three meals a day, and it requires no "looking after."

A Ford will save you time, trouble, and money. It is the utility car for the busy farmer and his family.

Military Service Act

Important Announcement to All

EXEMPTED MEN

and to the Public Generally

IN dealing with the very large number of claims for exemption brought forward for consideration in connection with Class 1 under the Military Service Act, it has occurred, as was inevitable, that as a result of false statements and difficulties put in the way of investigation, some individuals have secured exemption whose proper place is in the Army.

It is not the intention of the Government to allow these men to evade permanently their obligation to bear their part in the military defence of the Country and of the ideals for which we are fighting. To do so would defeat the purpose of the Act, and cause grave injustice to men in the second class necessarily called out to fill their places.

Exemptions Granted on False Grounds

It is, therefore, proposed to scrutinize carefully all exemptions granted to date in order to separate those which have been granted on false or insufficient grounds from those that are well founded.

With this object in view the various Registrars under the Military Service Act have been instructed to issue a series of questionnaires to exempted men. These questionnaires must be filled up correctly and returned promptly under penalty of forfeiture of exemption for failure to do so.

Exempted Men Who Have Changed Address

It is therefore important in their own interest that all exempted men who have changed their address since their exemption was granted and who have not already notified the Registrar of such change should notify him at once. Under the Regulations it is the duty of exempted men to keep the Registrar advised of any change of address, and failure to receive the questionnaire by reason of neglect of this duty must be treated as equivalent to failure to return the questionnaire after receipt.

Citizens Urged to Assist

In many instances information has been furnished by members of the public which has led to the cancellation of exemptions obtained by false or misleading statements. Further co-operation of this character is invited. The Government regard it as the Duty of all loyal citizens, not only to the Country, but to the men at the front, to assist in this way in securing reinforcements on a just and legal basis. Correspondence of this character will be treated as strictly confidential and will receive the fullest investigation.

CHARLES J. DOHERTY,
Minister of Justice.

Correspondence should be directed to W. E. Wismer, Esq., Deputy Registrar under the Military Service Act, London, Ont.

Barn and Silo Roofed with Brantford Asphalt Roofing.

Resists Fire, Sheds Water, Wears Long

Flying sparks and embers from a burning building often cause roofs near by to catch fire, especially in a dry, hot season. Under like conditions, roofs covered with are in no danger from flying embers, because any that fall on Brantford Asphalt Roofing die out harmlessly. Build a bonfire on a roof of Brantford Asphalt Roofing and the fire will not spread and the boards underneath the roofing will be protected in a surprising manner.

If a fire starts in the interior of a building Brantford Asphalt Roofing acts as a retardant and keeps the fire from spreading. Fire chiefs and insurance companies endorse its use in the most congested cities.

Brantford Asphalt Roofing does not absorb water, but sheds the heaviest rain with ease. Acid proof and alkali proof. Reliable, durable, economical. Three weights—60 lb., 70 lb., 80 lb. per square.

Brantford Rubber Roofing

Is the same quality as Brantford Asphalt, but has a smooth, rubbery surface instead of the sand. It is particularly suitable for verandah decks and floor coverings. Three weights—40 lb., 50 lb., and 60 lb. per square.

Standard Mohawk Roofing

Is made of the same materials as Brantford Asphalt Roofing, but is lighter in weight. A thoroughly reliable roofing at a low price. Tested for years and has given entire satisfaction. Sanded on one side. One weight—40 lbs. per square.

Mohawk Rubber Roofing

The same quality as Standard Mohawk but with a smooth surface. Used for all classes of temporary work—sheds, bunk-houses, camp sites, even dugouts in the trenches. 35 lb., 45 lb., and 55 lb. weights.

Leatheroid Roofing

Slightly lower quality than Mohawk Rubber. Used for same purposes. 35 lb., 45 lb., and 55 lb. weights.

It does us all good to get a peep into our neighbor's homes and lives occasionally, not for idle curiosity, but for the good it may do us. If you want to make yourself miserable, be selfish. Think all the time of yourself and your things. Don't care about anything else. Have no feelings for anyone but yourself. Never think of enjoying the satisfaction of seeing others happy, but rather if you see a smiling face, be jealous lest another should enjoy what you have not. Envy everyone who is better off financially than, and speak lightly of them. Be constantly afraid lest someone should encroach upon your rights. Be watchful, and if anyone comes near your things snap at him like a mad dog. Contend earnestly for everything that is your own though it may not be worth a pin, for your rights are just as much concerned as though it were a pound of gold. Never yield a point. Be sensitive, and take everything that is said to you in playfulness in the most serious manner. Be jealous of your friends lest they should not think enough of you. If at any time they should seem to neglect you, put the worst construction upon their conduct as you can.

Direct Tax on Farmers.

Plans for the taking an agricultural census, which the Government contemplates in co-operation with the Provincial Departments of Agriculture, apparently have ultimately in view some measure of direct taxation on the farming community. So far all farmers are practically exempt from war taxation on incomes or other forms of direct Federal taxation. But with the imperative need of increased revenues to relieve the burden of the war and its aftermath, the Government realizes that increased direct taxation [illegible]

ONTARIO BUYS APPLES

Money in Orchards When Properly Planted and Cared For.

BACKYARD GARDENING PAYS

Hints By an Expert in the Feeding and Care of the Mare and Foal.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

THE PLANTING of commercial apple orchards in the Province of Ontario is highly desirable for several reasons:—

1. Ontario is not producing enough good apples for home supply, but imports annually from Nova Scotia, British Columbia, Washington, Oregon and California.

2. Production in Ontario is likely to fall off still more because no commercial planting is being done. Very few commercial apple orchards have been set out in this province since 1911.

3. Of the thousands of young trees set in the bloom years of 1906 to 1911 a large proportion have already passed out of existence. Probably not more than 20 p.c. of the trees planted during those years will figure in the commercial production of the future, and certainly not more than 45 p.c. of them are alive and receiving attention to-day.

4. The home orchard will never again be an important factor in commercial apple production in this province, because it is not large enough to be worth while. In seasons when scab control is difficult or when prices are down because of a heavy crop, the return from the small orchards is not large enough to justify the expense and risk involved. When conditions are unfavorable the small orchard passes quickly into a state of neglect: this is why apple growing in Ontario is at such low ebb at present.

5. Fruit is an essential part of diet. While it is true that in case of necessity people can live without it, it is also true that health suffers and nutritional complaints become much more general in the absence from the dietary of fresh fruits and vegetables. The apple is the most important and most useful fruit of the temperate zone and, from the standpoint of public health its culture should not be neglected.—Prof. J. W. Crow, Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph.

Care of Pregnant Mares.

The pregnant mare should be well fed, and given regular exercise or light work. All food and water given should be of first-class quality. She should be given more grain than the non-pregnant mare, as she has her foetus to support. All possible care should be observed to avoid digestive derangements; hence everything consumed should be of good quality, easily digested, fed in proportion to the amount of work performed and at regular intervals. In addition to hay and oats, she should be given a few raw roots daily, and a feed of bran with a cupful of linseed meal, at least twice weekly.

Work that requires excessive muscular or respiratory effort should be avoided, so also should plunging through deep snow, slipping, etc. All nervous excitement should be avoided, so also should sights which frighten her, also offensive odors and operations.

The use of drugs should not be tolerated, except upon the advice of a veterinarian. If necessary to give a purgative it is much safer to give raw linseed oil than aloes. Towards the end of pregnancy still greater care should be observed, and, while daily exercise up to the very last is advisable, it should be given more carefully and less of it when she becomes somewhat clumsy on account of size and weight.

While it is better to allow her a box stall when in the stable at all times, it is practically necessary after about the tenth month of gestation, as the period of gestation is irregular and the foal may be born without any well-marked premonitory symptoms, any time after ten months.

After the foal is born the mare should be given at least two weeks idleness, and if she can be allowed to run idle until weaning time, it will be all the better for both herself and foal.—J.H.R., Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph.

Vacant Lot Gardening.

The majority of the horticultural societies in this province have accomplished great things with their vacant lot propaganda. In the cities of Toronto and Ottawa alone many acres have been cultivated. Ottawa reports over 100 acres from which 50,000 bushels of valuable garden products have been garnered in first-class condition. Those interested in horticulture in Toronto through the Vacant Lot Gardening Association have also done a splendid work and in a large way.

The report issued by the superintendent, Mr. Geo. Baldwin, states: Number of lots under cultivation during 1917, 796, all well cultivated. Number of soldiers and soldiers' families working lots, 50. Average size of lots 3,000 square feet, all marked with sign board. Passage of seeds provided 725, of which 407 were paid for. Several churches, hospitals, homes, girl guides, boy scouts included in lot holders. One lot looked after by a returned soldier who lost both his legs, another by a man with only one hand. The condition of both these lots would shame those who are not thus seriously handicapped. All gardens are inspected once a week and reminders sent to those who neglect their plots. The crops produced have a value of $[illegible] at wholesale rates. J. Leslie Wilson, Ontario [illegible] Toronto.

Able, but Not Willing.

"Come, now," persisted the lawyer, "are you not able to say of your own knowledge that the defendant was in the room at the time and objected to the whole proceeding?"

"Yes, sir," savagely replied the witness, "I am able to say it, I reckon, but I'd be telling the biggest lie you ever heard of if I did."

Feathered Night-Fishers.

One of the most remarkable instances of phosphorescent light appearing on living creatures is found among the herons. Among the quays and at the extreme end of Florida these birds are found in countless numbers. Mullet fishermen and sportsmen often noticed peculiar dim lights standing motionless over the water among the mangrove-thickets. They were discovered, however, to depend on the presence of the birds. When they were approached in the dark the flapping of wings as a heron flew away would mean the last of the lights. The Ardea Herodias, or great heron, has on its breast a spot about as large as the open palm, where the feathers are covered with a yellow powder that is easily rubbed off. It is evenly exuded from the body at [illegible] as a secretion, drying into a powder when [illegible] to the air. The bird stands [illegible] and the spot on its breast, and for an accomplishes the end of attracting the smaller fishes within reach of the bird, and if it is a decoy it is a most remarkable provision of nature.

A Natural History Note.

Insects recognize each other by smell. Among the bees each distinctive class of workers—the guard, the fanner, the pollen carrier, the wax-maker, the architect, etc.—has its own distinctive odor. And besides this, each bee has its own separate hive odor, which is its passport into its own particular home.

The average output of potatoes from Jersey is no fewer than 60,000 tons a year.

PRESENTATION TO PRIN WILLOUGHBY

Prior to leaving for Chesley last week where he has been appointed public school principal, Prin. Willoughby was presented by his pupils here with the following complimentary address and a handsome umbrella.

Mr. H. L. Willoughby

Dear Teacher:—

We are very sorry to know that you are going to leave us and this is our last day together as teacher and scholars. Since coming into the fourth form you have been more to us than a Public School teacher, you have been a true friend. Not only have you been most thorough in your teaching but by your example you have lived a life before your class and in the town that we would wish to imitate.

You will not only carry to your new school the best wishes of your class, but you will also leave behind an influence for good upon your pupils that will be helpful during this life and also in the life to come.

Our school work has been made less difficult by your cheerful and encouraging words. It is not in our power to repay you for all those kind words and deeds, but we would like you to accept from us a small token of our love and esteem. You can use it when the sky is cloudless and the sun is shining bright or you may use it even when it is raining.

Please accept from your class with our very best wishes, this gold-headed umbrella.

Signed on behalf of the Class

Helen Wilson.

Aunt Sally's Letter

To the Readers of
The Walkerton Telescope

Dear Friends:—

Some 40 young ladies of Walkerton are using all the available broom handles and mop handles around their houses these nice evenings, practising for the final test for First Aid. Many of them gather together in little groups at their homes and practise putting on bandages. This one has a fractured arm; that one has a broken leg; another must be revived after drowning. But believe me, not many of the girls are willing to do the drowning stunt for their friends to practise on them, as the methods used to restore respiration are somewhat strenuous.

In one town when the final test was given, the Dr. had a big fat man for the girls to demonstrate on. He was supposed to be drowned and insensible and the girls had to restore respiration. What big fat man of Walkerton will volunteer?

Some of the girls have been applying themselves so much to the study of First Aid that they dream about it at night. Some one is sick or injured and they are the first to the rescue. Of course it is a man in their dreams who is hurt. And do you know sometimes they are really truly men here in Walkerton that they dream about. Sometimes men whom they have never spoken to in their lives, and what beats the girls is how those particular men happened to get into their dreams.

The people in Walkerton can feel reasonably secure in case of accident for the girls are drilling so thoroughly on First Aid that it will never be forgotten.

We wish them all success at the final test.

Faithfully yours,
Aunt Sally.

LAST MAN MAY COUNT.

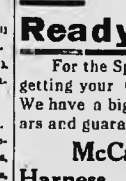
Canada Urged to Reinforce Troops With Least Delay.

OTTAWA, April 1.—The Duke of Devonshire, Governor-General of Canada, has received the following cablegram from Premier Lloyd George:

"I have been inspired during the past week with the constant news of the dauntless courage with which the Dominion troops have withstood the desperate assaults of vastly more numerous German troops. This battle shows that the Empire has reason to be proud of all its sons. Our armies cannot have too many of these splendid men. As already announced, we propose to ask Parliament to authorize immediate measures for raising fresh forces. I would also urge the Government of Canada to reinforce its heroic troops in the fullest possible manner and with the smallest possible delay. The struggle is only in its opening stages, and it is our business to see that our armies get the maximum measure of support that we can give them. Let no one think that what even the remotest of our Dominions can now do can be too late. Before this campaign is finished the last man may count."

Fire Destroys Glass Factory.

TORONTO, April 1.—In a spectacular fire that threw a reflection that could be seen for a distance of two miles, the Jefferson Glass Factory at 788 Carlaw avenue was totally destroyed by fire shortly before midnight. The loss was estimated at $300,000.



Eighty-three enemy planes were downed in Italy by British airmen.

...Mrs. Pinkerton.—

...behalf of the members of the ...ck Agricultural Society, we ...dersigned desire to express our ...deep sympathy for you in the loss ...have sustained, though the untime- ...ly death of your husband, the late Mr. ...Albert Pinkerton.

This expression comes from us not out of any desire to follow form, or custom, but out of a deep heartfelt feeling of the great loss which has befallen the Community, and the various organizations in our midst as well as the place in your home.

It affords us a great sense of satisfaction however, that even in the event of so great a loss, we have left to us a memory of one which can never be effaced from our past associations, one who was ever ready to render not only honest, and capable service, in every position and work, which he took in hand, but rendered it in a spirit of loving self-sacrifice, qualities which we shall ever treasure and with which we are loathe to part.

His presence will be greatly missed in our Society, in the Home and elsewhere, but we can only accept the disposal of an All Wise Providence, and humbly say, "Thy Will be Done".

Yours very sincerely,
John Clancy.

The trinket tea held last week at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Taylor takin wards 1 and 4 proved a decided success. The proceeds amounted to $25.38, besides a few trinkets. The money is deposited in the Bank until the trinket teas are completed. Other teas will be given in the different wards later.

He and an officer were in a shell hole and he only sustained a gunshot wound on the back of his hand, while the officer was killed. He expected to be back in the line on March 6th. It was a narrow escape for the Hanover.

Fred Howe, Hanover, was sentenced to six months at Burwash prison farm for non-support of his wife at Stratford on Tuesday. Miss E. Johns of Lindsay, who has been living with Howe, was sent for trial on two charges, one of obtaining a trunk at Toronto addressed to Mrs. Fred Howe, and the other of forging Mrs. Howe's name to bill of lading at Toronto.

BRANT AVENUE

Mr. Jack Lundy and son are a pretty busy firm. In spite of "bad roads" and backward weather, these two gentlemen are on the go every day, the senior member of the firm is busy trading, buying, and selling horses, while the junior member is right after the junk business.

Last week Mr. Noah Bruder and his son discovered a big elm tree over 2½ ft. thick in their bush had been struck by lightning this winter (as it looked quite fresh). A big portion of the butt of the green tree had been burned to ashes. Seems strange but it's true.

And so here we are after spending Easter at home. Haven't heard of many getting sick from eating too many colored eggs. The rabbit didn't get all the way around on his journey. It seemed his supply ran short in some cases so some youngsters are saying it seems such accidents will happen some times.

A large number from here attended Mr. James Cahoon's sale of farm stock and implements near Solway on Tues. Apr. 2nd. which was a monster sale and everything as usual went high.

Those who have tapped trees say the sap runs very slow so far this spring unless it soon changes into sugar in its slow place.

Mr. Wm. Diebel and Mr. George Brahler of Kincardine were among our Easter visitors.

Another wounded Mildmay boy has returned from overseas in the person of Pte. Leo. Herringer (Pope) who arrived in town last Saturday evening. Pope has grown to be a big man during his absence and looks pretty well. We are glad to see Pope back again in our midst after doing his bit.

Dr. Lucy of Guelph was called up on Monday afternoon to hold a consultation with Dr. Wilson about Miss Doretta Sauer whose illness is very serious now. An operation was performed Monday evening.

About a dozen boys in and near Mildmay have enlisted for farm work as soldiers of the soil. Among them are the following.—Allan Pfohl, Charlie Jasper, Wilfred Gress, Walter Schnurr, Bert Harper, Ralph Schefter, Bruce Thompson, Clarence Stumpf, August Kleist.

A pleasure-seeking party for Easter was trying the roads when they landed in the snow bank and a company coming from home from Church noticed the occupants had flown and left their faithful little Ford sitting by his lonesome in the snow bank. I think slow and steady wins the race.

EDEN GROVE

There was a very select gathering at the Bailey Bros. Exclusive Club House here last week. Edward Bailey, representing the Canadian Shell Manufacturers Association, was personally present, Mac. Scott, representing the T. Eaton Co's. Mail Order House, John Killen, President of the Axe Handler's Union and John Seller, Head Agent for John Labatt 2% Co. were seated about the marble table in the centre of the room. On one side one caught sights of P. O'Reilly and Tom Desmond, joint editors of the London Advertiser, while still further back the stout form of W. Fair, Master Builder, was seated beside the still stouter form of A. S. Belback, delegate from the Retailers' of the West. The chair was occupied by a youth unknown to me. He was clad in overalls with wisps of hay in his hair and on his clothes, which, when he rose, formed a small bale about his feet. After he called the meeting to attention he commenced to quote poetry by the yard. So smooth was the meter of his lines and so beautiful its rythm that it brought tears to my eyes and I was forced to leave my seat, borrow a little hay from the Chairman's head and leave the room, so my sobbing would not disturb the others. I understand, however, that A. L. in a two hour speech thanked the Chairman for his wonderful effort.

sez he, and to near many gals goin' on somewheres an' then either Willie Baxter or Joe Bullitt or somebody or another arguin' about love. Mamma, he said"—Jane became impressive—"he said, mamma, he said he didn't mind the Sunday school class, but he couldn't stand those dasm boys!"

"Jane," Mrs. Baxter cried, "you mustn't say such things!"

"I didn't, mamma; Mr. Parcher said it. He said he couldn't stand those dasm"—

"Jane! No matter what he said, you mustn't repeat it."

"But I'm not. I only said"—

Mrs. Baxter imprisoned Jane's mouth with a firm hand. Jane continued to swallow quietly until released.

"Hush!" Mrs. Baxter commanded. "You must never, never again use such a terrible and wicked word."

"I won't, mamma," Jane said meekly. Then she brightened. "Oh, I know! I'll say 'word' instead. Won't that be all right?"

"I—I suppose so."

"Well, Mr. Parcher said he couldn't stand those word boys. That sounds all right, doesn't it, mamma?"

Mrs. Baxter hesitated, but she well knew that Jane had her own way of telling things, or else they remained untold.

"I—I suppose so."

"Well, they kind of talked along," Jane continued, much pleased, "an' Mr. Parcher said when he was young he wasn't any such a—such a word fool as these young word fools were. He said in all his born days Willie Baxter was the wordest fool he ever saw."

Willie Baxter's mother flushed a little. "That was very unjust and very wrong of Mr. Parcher," she said primly.

"Oh, no, mamma!" Jane protested. "Mrs. Parcher thought so too."

"Did she, indeed!"

"Only she didn't say word or wordest or anything like that," Jane explained. "She said it was because Miss Pratt had conzed him so he was in love of her. An' Mr. Parcher said he didn't care, those fault it was, Willie was a—a word calf, an' so were all the rest of 'em, Mr. Parcher said. An' he said he couldn't stand it any more. Mr. Parcher said that a whole lot of times, mamma. He said he guess' pretty soon he'd haf to be in the lunatic asylum if Miss Pratt stayed a few more days with her word little dog an' her word Willie Baxter an' all the other word calfs. Mrs. Parcher said he oughtn't to say 'word,' mamma. She said, 'Hush, hush!' to him, mamma. He talked like this, mamma: He said, 'I'll be word if I stand it!' An' he kept gettin' crosser, an' he said: 'Word! Word! Word! WOR'"—

"There!" Mrs. Baxter interrupted sharply. "That will do, Jane! We'll talk about something else now, I think."

At nightfall Jane was saying her prayers beside her bed, while her mother stood close by.

"An' bless mamma an' papa an'"—Jane murmured, coming to a pause—"an'—an' bless Willie," she added, with a little reluctance.

"Go on, dear," said her mother. "You haven't finished."

"I know it, mamma," Jane looked up to say. "I was jest thinkin' a minute. I want to tell you about somep'n."

"Finish your prayers first, Jane."

Jane obeyed with a swiftness in which there was no intentional irreverence; then she jumped into bed and began a fresh revelation.

"It's about papa's clo'es, mamma."

"What clothes of papa's? What do you mean, Jane?" asked Mrs. Baxter, puzzled.

"The ones you couldn't find—the ones you been lookin' for 'most every day."

"You mean papa's evening clothes?"

"Yes'm," said Jane. "Willie's got 'em on," Jane assured her, with emphasis. "I bet he's had 'em on every single evening since Miss Pratt came to visit the Parchers. Anyway, he's got 'em on now, 'cause I saw 'em."

Mrs. Baxter frowned. "Are you sure?"

"Yes'm. I saw him in 'em. I was in my bare feet after I got undressed, an' I was kind of walkin' around in the hall"—

"You shouldn't do that, Jane."

"No'm. An' I heard Willie say somep'n kind of to himself, or like declamation. He was inside his room, but the door wasn't quite shut. He started out once, but he went back for somep'n an' forgot to, I guess. Anyway, I thought I better look an' see what was goin' on, mamma, so I just kind of peeked in"—

"But you shouldn't do that, dear," Mrs. Baxter said musingly. "It isn't really quite honorable."

"No'm. Well, what you think he was doin'?" Jane's voice betrayed [illegible] and so did her eyes) "He [illegible] in papa's clo'es [illegible] perfume that looked glass, an' first sorta bow his head over on one side, an' then he'd lean it over on the other side, an' then he'd bark, mamma."

"He'd what?"

"Yes'm!" said Jane. "He'd give a little, teeny bark, mamma—kind of like a puppy, mamma."

"What?" cried Mrs. Baxter.

"Yes'm, he did!" Jane asserted. "He did it four or five times. First he'd lean his head way over on his shoulder like this—look, mamma!—an' then he'd lean it away over the other shoulder, an' every time he'd do it he'd bark. 'Barp-werp!' he'd say, mamma, just like that, only not loud at all. He said 'Barp-werp! Barp-werp-werp! You could tell he meant it for barkin', but it wasn't very good, mamma. What you think he meant, mamma?"

"Heaven knows!" murmured the astonished mother.

"An' then," Jane continued, "he quit barkin' all of a sudden, an' didn't lean his head over any more, an' commenced actin' kind of solemn, an' kind of whispered to himself. I think he was kind of pretendin' he was talkin' to Miss Pratt or at a party, maybe. Anyways, he spoke out loud after while—not just exactly loud, I mean, but anyway so's I could hear what he said. Mamma, he said, 'Oh, my baby talk lady!' just like that, mamma. Listen, mamma, here's the way he said it; 'Oh, my baby talk lady!'"

Jane's voice in this impersonation became sufficiently soft and tremulous to give Mrs. Baxter a fair idea of the tender yearning of the original. "'Oh, my baby talk lady!'" cooed the terrible Jane.

"Mercy!" Mrs. Baxter exclaimed. "Perhaps it's no wonder Mr. Parcher"— She broke off abruptly, then inquired, "What did he do next, Jane?"

"Next," said Jane, "he put the light out, an' I kind of squeezed up against the wall, an' he never saw me. He went on out to the back stairs an' went down the stairs tiptoe, mamma. I think he goes out that way an' through the kitchen on account of papa's clo'es."

"I suppose so," Mrs. Baxter said. "I think perhaps"— For a moment or two she wrapped herself in thought. "Perhaps," she repeated musingly—"perhaps we'll keep this just a secret between you and me for a little while, Jane, and not say anything to papa about the clothes. I don't think it will hurt them, and I suppose Willie feels they give him a great advantage over the other boys."

Mrs. Baxter turned out the light, then came and kissed Jane in the dark. "Good night, dear."

"G' night, mamma." But as Mrs. Baxter reached the door Jane's voice was heard again.

"Mamma?"

"Yes?" Mrs. Baxter paused.

"Mamma, what do you s'pose Willie barked at the lookin'-glass for?"

"That," said Mrs. Baxter, "is beyond me. Young people and children do the strangest things, Jane! And then, when they get to be middle aged, they forget all those strange things they did, and they can't understand what the new young people, like you and Willie, mean by the strange things they do."

"Yes'm. I bet I know what he was barkin' for, mamma. I think he was kind of practicin'. I think he was practicin' how to bark at Mr. Parcher."

"No, no!" Mrs. Baxter laughed. "Who ever could think of such a thing but you, Jane? You go to sleep and forget your nonsense!"

Nevertheless Jane might always have been gifted with clairvoyance, her preposterous idea came so close to the actual fact, for at that very moment William was barking. He was not barking directly at Mr. Parcher, it is true, but within a short distance of him and all too well within his hearing.

CHAPTER V.

Mr. Parcher and Love.

MR. PARCHER, that unhappy gentleman, having been driven indoors from his own porch, had attempted to read "Plutarch's Lives" in the library; but, owing to the adjacency of the porch and the summer necessity for open windows, his escape spared only his eyes and not his suffering ears. The house was small, being but half of a double one, with small rooms, and the "parlor," library and dining room all about equally exposed to the porch which ran along the side of the house.

Mr. Parcher had no refuge except bed or the kitchen, and as he was troubled with chronic insomnia, and the cook had callers in the kitchen, his case was desperate. Most unfortunately, too, his reading lamp, the only one in the house, was a fixture near a window, and just beyond that window sat Miss Pratt and William in sweet unconsciousness while Miss Parcher entertained the overflow, consisting of Mr. Johnnie Watson, at the other end of the porch.

Listening perforce to the conversation of the former couple, he found it impossible to sit still in his chair. Sometimes he gasped, and other times he moaned a little.

"Oh, cute unsa!" came the silvery voice of Miss Pratt from the likewise silvery porch outside, underneath the summer moon. "Darlin' Flopit, lookl ickle boy Baxter goin' make imitations of darlin' Flopit again. Seel ickle boy Baxter puts head one side, then other side, just like darlin' Flopit, then barks just like darlin' Flopit! Ladies and gutlemen, imitations of darlin' Flopit by ickle boy Baxter."

"Berp-werp! Berp-werp!" came the voice of William Sylvanus Baxter.

And in the library "Plutarch's Lives" moved convulsively, while with writhing lips Mr. Parcher muttered to himself.

"More, more!" cried Miss Pratt, clapping her hands. "Do it again, ickle boy Baxter!"

"Berp-werp! Berp-werp-werp!"

"Word!" muttered Mr. Parcher.

Miss Pratt's voice became surcharged with honeyed wonder. "How did he learn such marv'lous, marv'lous imitations of darlin' Flopit? He ought to go on the big, big stage and be a really, actor, oughtn't he, darlin' Flopit? He could make millyuns and millyuns of dollarzies, couldn't he, darlin' Flopit?"

William's modest laugh disclaimed any great ambition for himself in this line. "Oh, I always could think up imitations of animals, things like that, but I hardly would care to—to adopt the stage for a career. Would—you?" There was a thrill in his voice when he pronounced the ineffably significant word "you."

"It's my dream!" she said.

William, seated upon a stool at her feet, gazed up at the amber head, divinely splashed by the rain of moonlight. The fire with which she spoke stirred him as few things had ever stirred him. He knew she had just revealed a side of herself that she reserved for only the chosen few who were capable of understanding her, and he fell into a blissful rapture.

"Do it again, ickle boy Baxter!"

"It was wonderful of you to say that to me," he said. "I shall never forget it!"

"It's my dream!" Miss Pratt exclaimed again, with the same enthusiasm. "It's my dream!"

"You would make a glorious actress!" he said.

At that her mood changed. She laughed a laugh like a sweet little girl's laugh (not Jane's) and, setting her rocking chair in motion, cuddled the fuzzy white doglet in her arms. "Ickle boy Baxter tyin' fatherboy on, mamin' Flopit! No'ty, no'ty fatherboy!"

"No, no!" William insisted earnestly. "I mean it. But—but"—

"But whatcomsa?"

"What do you think about actors and actresses making love to each other on the stage? Do you think they have to really feel it, or do they just pretend?"

"Well," said Miss Pratt weightily, "sometimes one way, sometimes the other."

William's gravity became more and more profound. "Yes, but how can they pretend like that? Don't you think love is a sacred thing, Cousin Lola?"

Fictitious sisterships, brotherships and cousinships are devices to push things along well known to seventeen and even more advanced ages. On the wonderful evening of their first meeting William and Miss Pratt had coolly arranged to be called respectively "Ickle boy Baxter" and "Cousin Lola." Thus they had broken down the tedious formalities of their first twenty minutes together.

"Don't you think love is sacred?" he repeated in his deepest tone.

"Ess," said Miss Pratt.

"I do!" William was emphatic. "I think love is the most sacred thing there is. I don't mean some kinds of love. I mean real love. You take some people; I don't believe they ever know what real love means. They talk about it, maybe, but they don't understand it. Love is something nobody can understand unless they feel it, and—and if they don't understand it they don't feel it. Don't you think so?"

"Ess."

"Love," William continued, his voice lifting and thrilling to the great theme—"love is something nobody can ever have but one time in their lives, and if they don't have it then, why, probly they never will. Now, if a man really loves a girl, why, he'd do anything in the world she wanted him to. Don't you think so?"

"Ess, 'deedums!" said the silvery voice.

"But if he didn't, then he wouldn't," said William vehemently. "But when a man [illegible] you take a man like that and he can generally do just about anything the girl he loves wants him to. Say, for instance, she wants him to love her even more than he does already, or almost anything like that, and supposin' she asks him to. Well, he would go ahead and do it. If they really loved each other he would!"

He paused a moment, then in a lowered tone he said, "I think real love is sacred, don't you?"

"Ess."

"Don't you think love is the most sacred thing there is—that is, if it's real love?"

"Ess."

"I do," said William warmly. "I—I'm glad you feel like that, because I think real love is the kind nobody could have but just once in their lives, but if it isn't real love, why—why, most people never have it at all, because"— He paused, seeming to seek for the exact phrase which would express his meaning. "Because the real love a man feels for a girl and a girl for a man, if they really love each other—and, you look at a case like that, of course they would both love each other or it wouldn't be real love—well, what I say is, if it's real love—well, it's—it's sacred, because I think that kind of love is always sacred. Don't you think love is sacred if it's the real thing?"

"Ess," said Miss Pratt. "Do Flopit again. Be Flopit!"

"Barp-werp! Barp-werp-werp!"

And within the library an agonised man writhed and muttered:

"Word! Word! WORD!"—

This hoarse repetition had become almost continuous. But out on the porch, that little jasmine scented bower in Arcady where youth cried to youth and golden heads were haloed in the moonshine, there fell a silence, not utter silence, for out there an ethereal music sounded constantly, unheard and forgotten by elder ears.

It was William who spoke again. "How"— he began, and his voice trembled a little—"how—how do you—how do you think of me when I'm not with you?"

"Think nice-cums," Miss Pratt responded. "Flopit an' me think nice-cums."

"No," said William; "I mean what mama do you have for me when you're—when you're thinking about me?"

Miss Pratt seemed to be puzzled.

"I mean like this," William explained: "F'r instance, when you first came I always thought of you as Milady."

"Ess. Boo'tums."

"But now I don't," he said. "Now I think of you by another name when I'm alone. It—it just sort of came to me. It was about as strange a thing as I ever knew of. Don't you think so?"

"Ess. It ox dest weird!" she answered. "What are dat pitty names?"

"I called you," said William huskily and reverently—"I called you My Baby Talk Lady."

Bang!

They were startled by a crash from within the library. A heavy weight seemed to have fallen, or to have been hurled, a considerable distance. Stepping to the window, William beheld a large volume lying in a distorted attitude at the foot of the wall opposite to that in which the reading lamp was a fixture. Mr. Parcher had given up and was now hastening to his bed in the last faint hope of saving his reason.

William gazed upon the fallen Plutarch. "Somebody must 'a' thrown it at a bug or something, I guess." Then a second explosion sent its reverberations through the house.

"My doodness!" Miss Pratt exclaimed.

William laughed reassuringly. "It's only a door blew shut upstairs," he said.

Unfortunately for him, Joe Bullitt now made his appearance. Mr. Bullitt, though almost a year younger than either William or Johnnie Watson, was of a masterful disposition. Moreover, in regard to Miss Pratt, his affections were in as ardent a state as those of his rivals, and he lacked Johnnie's meekness. He firmly declined to be absorbed by Miss Parcher, who was trying to favor William's cause, according to a promise he had won of her. Regardless of her efforts, Mr. Bullitt descended upon William and his Baby Talk Lady and received from the latter a honeyed greeting, somewhat to the former's astonishment.

"Oh, goody cute!" cried Miss Pratt. "Here's big Bruvva Joole-Joe!" And she lifted her little dog close to Mr. Bullitt's face, guiding one of Flopit's paws with her fingers. "Stroke big Bruvva Joole-Joe's pint teeks, darlin' Flopit." Joole-Joe's pink cheeks were indicated by the expression "pint teeks" evidently, for her accompanying action was to pass Flopit's paw lightly over those glowing surfaces.) "At's nice!" she remarked. "Stroke him gently, p'eabus Flopit, an' den we'll coax him to make pitty singin' for us, like us did yestiday."

She turned to William.

"Coax him to make pitty singin'. I love his voice. I'm dest crazy over it, isn't oo?"

William's passion for Mr. Bullitt's voice appeared to be under control. He laughed coldly, almost harshly. "Him sing?" he said. "Has he been tryin' to sing around here? I wonder the family didn't call for the police!"

"Well, they will," Bullitt retorted. "If you ever spring one o' your solos on 'em!" And, turning to Miss Pratt, he laughed loudly and bitterly. "You ought to hear Silly Bill sing—some time when you don't mind goin' to bed sick for a couple o' days!"

"Let's all sing," the tactful Miss Pratt proposed hastily. "Come on, May and Cousin Johnnie Joun-Upit!" she called to Miss Parcher and Mr. Watson. "Singin' school, dirls an' boys! Singin' school! Ding, ding! Skuzin'-school bell's a-ringin'!"

Bottle Was "Planted."

Before Magistrate Weir in Kitchener police court the charge of having liquor upon his business premises preferred against Louis Nicoloff was withdrawn. FELL FROM MOTOR TRUCK

Mr. John Kuntz, formerly of Walkerton, was victim of a Fatal Accident at Kitchener on Monday

Walkerton people were shocked by the sad news on Tuesday that Mr. John Kuntz, a former well-known and respected citizen had met his death accidentally at Kitchener. Mr. Kuntz was moving to another house in Kitchener on Monday and was seated on a motor truck, standing some of the furniture, when the chair he was sitting on jolted backwards, as the load crossed the sidewalk, and he thrown to the ground, slightly upon his head. He was picked up in an unconscious condition, concussion to the brain having resulted. The accident took place about five o'clock in the evening and at one o'clock a. m. he passed away.

Mr. Kuntz was born at Formosa fifty years ago last September. He lived on the farm until fifteen years ago, when he bought the Central Hotel, Walkerton, which he conducted for a number of years, selling to the present proprietors. He then engaged in livestock shipping and for a time was in partnership with Mr. J. J. Zettler. In October 1916 he bought a large florist business at Kitchener and removed to that city. Recently he had disposed of that business and was living retired. Mr. Kuntz was a successful business man and amassed a considerable estate. He was generous, straightforward, genial, and made friends wherever he went. His many old friends here mourn his untimely taking-off in the very prime of manhood, and have the deepest sympathy for the bereaved family in their shocking loss. Besides his widow, who was formerly Miss Montag, he leaves a family of five, all at home. They are; Irene, Melinda, Teresa, Hilda and Harry. His brothers and sisters are Ex-Reeve Ed. C. Kuntz of Culross, David of U. S., Wm. and Michael of Formosa Mrs. Schumacher, Mrs. Jos. Hinsperger, and Mrs. Geo. Diemert of Kitchener, and Mrs. John Diemert of Toronto.

The funeral will take place at Kitchener on Friday.

Death of Mrs. McCurdy

The death occurred at Grandora, Sask., on Good Friday night, March 29th, of Mrs. Annie McCurdy, a former respected resident of Walkerton. Mrs. McCurdy, who was in her 64th year, had not enjoyed very good health since an accident six years ago, when she fell in the cellar breaking her arm. Her taking off was very sudden, death being due to heart failure. Mrs. McCurdy had been making her home with her bachelor sons, J. L. at Grandora, and J. J. and Richard at Coleville, Sask. She was very devoted to her family and to the three boys their sudden loss is a very sad one. The remains were brought home to be interred in the Cemetery in North Brant. The funeral, which was held on Monday, was conducted by Rev. Father Hoffarth. The pall-bearers were old neighbors of North Brant:—Hugh Ferguson, Anthony McCurdy, John Driscoll, Michael Driscoll, Peter McGarity, Patrick McGarity.

CHILDREN'S AID WORK

Will be Organized in Bruce on Thorough Scale by Newly Appointed Agent, Mr. T. H. Elliott

Mr T. H. Elliott, the newly appointed Children's Aid Agent for Bruce County, arrived here on Friday. Mr. Elliott comes highly recommended by Prov. Supt. J. J. Kelso. He is a young man who has had several years of valuable experience in the work, and has a fund of energy and enthusiasm for the undertaking that promises well for the future of Children's Aid work in Bruce. In those counties where an Agent has given his whole time to the work, the Children's Aid Society has performed a public service which is widely recognized and appreciated. The possibilities of the service that a thorough organization in Bruce could accomplish with an active trained worker such as Mr. Elliott, are very great, and Mr. Elliott is very much impressed with the prospects. The hearty co-operation of the County Council and of citizens throughout the County will be of course needed. Local branches of the Society, will be formed in the various municipalities as has been done in other organized counties. Mr. Elliott's idea is not to fill the local Shelter with children. The children are placed in good foster homes as soon as possible. This will mean keeping in close touch with the farmers throughout the County. Mr. Elliott was in the Children's Aid work for several years at Ottawa. For the past two years he has been at Detroit, doing social service work among the employees of the Ford Motor works for Mr. Henry Ford.

House Burned Down

The home of Mr. Ed. McKelvie, South Line, Brant, took fire Wednesday morning and burned to the ground. There was a strong wind blowing and the dry frame burned quickly. The origin of the fire is a mystery. It is supposed to have started in the side-kitchen but there was no fire in the stove at the time. The women were in another part of the house when it caught and the flames got quite a headway before they were noticed. Farmers along the line hurried to the scene in autos and rigs in answer to the phone call and there were soon fifty people on the scene but their best efforts couldn't save the building, which was burnt down to the foundation. Quite a lot of the furniture was saved. The loss on the building which was a storey and a half frame structure, was mostly covered by insurance in the Formosa Mutual Co.

Bowling Club Re-organizes

The annual meeting of the Walkerton Bowling Club was held on Friday evening April 5th. The Secretary-Treasurer reported a small deficit in the general fund but the very successful tournament held on Labor Day by fifty-six rinks from various parts of Western Ontario, has enabled the club to meet all expenses and leave a balance on the right side. The expenditure included a donation of $30 to the Daughters of the Empire. $50 was also paid to the Walkerton Women's Hospital Aid in return for the refreshments provided by the ladies at the tournament. The members of the club desire to express their appreciation of the kindness and courtesy extended by the ladies to themselves and their guests which contributed so largely to the pleasure of the occasion. Notwithstanding the call to back yard and vacant lot production which the bowlers, with other citizens, responded to, time was found for many enjoyable evenings at the game of Armada fame. Among interesting events of the season were the winning of the Keystone Trophy by T. Pye's rink at Southampton and the first prize in the Consolation won by A. P. Sieveright's rink in the local tournament. The following officers were elected for the year:—Hon. Pres., E. McConnell; Pres. H. G. Hunter; Vice Pres., H. A. Stephan; Sec'y-Treas., C. S. Stephan; Managing Committee; G. T. Rourke, A. P. Sieveright, T. Pye, A. E. McNab, J. Clancy, C. H. Rogers and the officers above mentioned.

CITY GIRLS AS FARMERETTES

Editor Telescope:—

As we are in the spring of the year, and nearing seeding time, we are having this greater production cry pounded in our heads and ears, through the newspapers, from every pulpit, and through all the rural schools, till we are so fully filled up with it that we can fully express our opinions on it.

As a farmer's daughter, and working on the farm ever since I was able to work. The city girl is going to increase production in a different way than we understand to do it. They are not to do any pitching. Can a man draw in alone? Has not the hired help to take the half man's place? If not, what do we want it for? The farmer's daughter has to take this work on her shoulders. It is not too hard for her.

They are not to hoe or scrub. As a farmer's daughter, I have worked all day in a dazzling heat, and then came in after six and milked the cows and scrubbed the floor. The city girls are to do none of this. What are they going to do? Sit in the hammock, and play the piano? We need no visitors like that. Now-a-days time is too precious for us.

To increase production you must pitch and hoe. The farmers have all tried to do their best, when the cost of living is so high, and I know they will do the same this year.

I take great interest in reading the letters the farmer's wives and daughters take in their own rights.

The city folk look upon the farmer's wives as not much account anyway; their work is to raise more hogs, pitch, hoe, and everything that is the "half-man's" part. They never grow tired with the house work and milking cows, after a hard day's work in the field. We have somewhat the same experience as a preacher who was out for dinner, and had rabbits of all kinds dished up to him, and when asked to say the blessing, said: "Rat-bits hot, rabbits cold, rabbits tender and rabbits tough, thank God we have had enough."

RULES FOR THE MOTORIST

Now that the automobile season is about here again the following hints may be of some use to drivers:

Drive carefully at street intersections particularly when entering a main thoroughfare. The great majority of accidents happen at street intersections.

At street intersections, a motor car approaching from your right hand side has the right-of-way.

In the presence of danger, there is no right-of-way. It is your duty to prevent an accident under any circumstances.

Reckless driving is always illegal no matter what speed.

The majority of fast drivers have nothing to do when they get there. They are menace to themselves, to those whom they pass, and a nuisance to the people who reside along the road.

When you meet a vehicle, pass on the right; when you overtake one pass on the left.

Do not change speed or direction suddenly. Indicate your intention by holding your hand up if you wish to stop and to the side if you are going to turn. There is usually a car behind you.

Pedestrians who have started to cross a street at a reasonable distance from an approaching motor car, have the right to do so at the pace of an ordinary walk, and the motorist has no right to compel pedestrians to rush or run for safety by the insolent blowing of the horn.

Slacken speed when approaching pedestrians, blow the horn if thought necessary to warn them, but permit them to cross the street in safety at a reasonable pace. Remember there are old people, invalids and children.

When on a street of small houses and large families, and the family principally in the street, especially after school hours, drive slowly. A child is not responsible under the law. You are.

THE PASSING OF COURTSHIP

This is the age of quick decisions. Indeed, none of us, even when it comes to the most trivial things (in which we might indulge in the pleasure of indecision), can afford to daily waste time. We must decide instantly and pass on, or we are lost.

Thus it happens that courtship, that most beautiful period in the lives of two human beings, has become sadly encroached upon; until, indeed, it is doubtful that there is any of it left. We meet, we love, we telephone for the necessary official, we marry. To linger on old sofas, to swing on rustic gates, to walk in shady lanes, is no longer the lot of man. The lovers' quarrel is too great a luxury. It has been trimmed down to practically nothing. The good-bye kiss, that former lingering joy, is now a hasty, an abrupt affair of concentrated seconds. Hand-holding is a memory.

Time was, when every young man served his apprenticeship at learning to love. His sighs, his awkwardness, his intense bashfulness, all had to be gradually overcome by a series of self-taught steps. Now a few evenings at the "movies" and the veriest tyro becomes a past master. He meets the girl, grabs her in approval fashion and along the lines of the highest efficiency, kisses her passionately, and the whole affair is settled.

Even in these circumstances, however, courtship might be possible after marriage; for there has been no time to get acquainted with one's wife. The great difficulty, however, is that, even after marriage, no one sees one's wife any more. How can anyone court a woman who is always out of sight?

Plan of a Handy and Inexpensive Workshop Which May Be Built by Any Farmer. See Accompanying Article for Details.

COLTS ARE PROFITABLE

When Fed and Cared For According to the Best Practice.

TO BUILD FARM WORKSHOP

Full Directions With Plans and Bill of Materials—They Will Appeal to the Farmer Who Does His Own Repairing.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

THE FIRST WINTER is a critical time in the life of a colt. The care and attention he receives during this period determines, to a great extent, his future usefulness. If he be poorly fed, neglected, and allowed to become thin and weak, it is probable he will never be as good or valuable an animal as he would have been under more favorable circumstances. He, in the first place, should be provided with warm, comfortable and well ventilated quarters; and, while he should be taught to lead, and stand tied, it is much better if he have a roomy stall to stand in.

The next question is: "What, and how much should he be fed?" In our opinion there is little danger of overfeeding at this age. While there are exceptions, it is usually safe to give a weanling all he will eat, provided he gets regular exercise, but it must be understood that he should not be given more than he will eat. It is a mistake to keep food before him all the time. He should, with apparent relish, eat all that is given him, in at most 1½ hours, and then will be ready for the next meal when the time arrives.

It is not easy to say just how much feed a colt of a given age and size should consume, but the attendant, if a careful and observant man, will soon be able to determine the quantity to be given at each meal, and be able to give sufficient without waste. Hay and oats should be the food upon which to depend for growth, both of muscle and bone. If other grain than oats be given we will take back what we have said about "there being little danger of over-feeding." All food should be of first-class quality. Well-saved clover is the best kind of hay, but where this cannot be got, well-saved Timothy makes a good substitute. Hay should be fed in the necessary quantities three times daily, and we prefer whole, to cut hay for such young animals.

The manner in which oats should be fed will admit of argument. In our opinion, and experience, rolled oats that have been scalded and allowed to become cool, and that they thrive on such. The practice of mixing a ration of rolled oats and a little wheat chaff or cut hay, in a pail, pouring some boiling water on it, covering and allowing it to stand for a few hours before feeding, gives excellent results.

The morning's meal can be prepared in the evening, and the evening's meal in the same vessel in the morning, the noon-day meal being either dry rolled or whole oats. In addition to hay and oats the colt should be given a carrot or two with the noon meal, and a feed of bran, either damp or dry, at least twice weekly. This may be extra, or in lieu of oats, as is indicated by the apparent requirements of the colt.

His feet require attention. The wear is usually not sufficient to keep them in proper shape, the toes grow long and the heels deep and narrow, and the wall turns inwards below the quarters. If this be not corrected or prevented, permanent harm may result. The feet should be carefully examined at least once monthly and dressed to as near the normal size and shape as possible by the use of a shoeing smith's knife and rasp.

The stall should be cleaned out at least once weekly.—J. H. H., Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph.

A Farm Workshop.

The progressive farmer recognizes the need of a small building where he can overhaul, paint and repair his farm equipment in the most expeditious manner. Such a building must be compact and conveniently arranged with a floor space that will accommodate any of his larger machines.

The floor should be of concrete to stand the wear and tear. In making the floor it will be necessary to place the anchor bolts, to which the sill is fastened, before the concrete has set.

The work bench, forge and heater must be so placed that the centre of the floor is left clear, but the bench and anvil must be well lighted. The placing of the long window will depend upon which side of the shop receiving the best light.

Stairs lead through a trap-door to the loft, where the lumber, etc., is stored. This loft is lighted with a window at each end but it also has a small door at the front, on a level with the floor.

DAIRY THE FAIR

BOWS NEED SOME MINERAL

Animals Unable to Utilize Small Amount From Ordinary Rations Suggest Early.

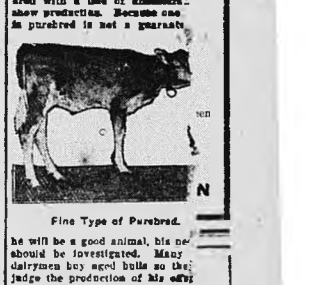
It has been definitely proved [illegible] cows which produce a heavy flow of milk are not able to [illegible] sufficient mineral matter from the [illegible] ration to maintain the [illegible] supply of minerals in the body; in other words, more of these mineral elements are given off than the animal obtains from the ration, and the body of the cow is robbed of minerals it wants to supply the deficiency.

In addition to an ordinary ration one ounce of common salt [illegible] daily is sufficient to maintain the proper quantity of sodium and chlorine in a cow producing 45 pounds of milk daily. An ordinary mixed ration supplies sufficient potassium for the need of a high-producing cow. The element calcium or lime appears to be deficient in all cows except those giving a very low milk production.

The deficiency of minerals in a ration had no apparent effect on the amount or composition of the milk. This fact proves that the deficiency is overcome, as far as possible, by mineral elements taken from the body of the cow. While the nitrogenous compounds from alfalfa hay were slightly more digestible than those from clover hay, the nitrogen from clover was equally as valuable, because it was more completely utilized than the NaNO₃ nitrogen. The quantities of nitrogen utilized from clover and alfalfa were therefore practically the same.

LARGEST RECORD FOR

Cow High in Fiesh at Calving Gives Much Richer Milk for a Period Than When Thin.



Missouri investigators have found that a cow high in flesh at calving time gives very much richer milk, at some time than would be the case were she thin. This discovery is now made use of by every [illegible] dairy cattle who desires to make the largest possible record for both milk and butter fat production.

Another interesting discovery when a cow is underfed [illegible] rarely she gives richer milk than thinner as might be expected. This is of great importance in connection with making tests of cows, as failure to understand this fact has resulted in wrong conclusions being drawn from many experiments conducted with cows in the past.

FIRM FOUNDATION FOR

No Amount of Feed Will Make a Poor Cow Out of One That Does Not Have Milk Tendency.

Build your dairy breed on a firm foundation. No amount of feed, said a prominent cow out of one that does not inherit a strong tendency to give milk. One must, therefore, be careful in selecting the foundation stock for the herd. The bull should be selected with a line of ancestors of heavy production. Because one is purebred is not a guarantee that he will be a good animal, his ancestors should be investigated. Many dairymen buy good bulls so they can judge the production of his offspring. If good purebred cows cannot be had, use the best grade cows obtainable. It may be said that of production, purebred bulls are, on good cows, the fourth-generation will be equal to purebreds as far as production is concerned.

Fine Type of Purebred.

CLEAN COW STABLES NEE

Good Milk, Free From Odd Odors, Cannot Be Secured Under Unsanitary Conditions.

The dairyman cannot get good free from odors and fit to sell on city market, when his stables are in an unsanitary condition. When manure is left to pack under the cows feet, mold and rot, the odor is strong that it will contaminate the milk even while it is being drawn from the cow.

COOK FEEDS FOR DAIRY CO

No Advantage in Practice, Even That Some Unpalatable Food May Be Consumed.

There is no advantage in cooking steaming feeds for dairy cows. Some unpalatable feeds may be consumed in larger quantities if cooked, but cooking does not ordinarily add much to the palatability of grains and may even decrease their digestibility.

"There has never yet been a nation that did anything great in the world that was not deeply religious. About Hens And Pigs

They do say that Sir Joseph has his eye on the Yukon, where the sun shines all winter and the hens can be fooled into working double shifts, but they'll get onto him soon enough. All the hens around here are onto him as big as a house, and that is one reason why city people won't keep hens in their backyards. They absolutely refuse to bring up hens foredoomed to work for Sir Joseph. It isn't fair to the consumer. The hen should have some joy of her craftsmanship and the consumer should have, at least, a fighting chance for the eggs. For the same reason city people refuse to keep a pig in the backyard, although a recent order-in-council allows and even encourages the practice. Suppose you had a little pig in your home, Clarence by name or maybe Tillie. You feed him what's left of the bread pudding, the tails of the sirloin steak, the cold potatoes and other eates that are used to furnish the charwoman's lunch of a Wednesday. You stuff him till he is round and rosy, you educate him perhaps, teach him to count up to ten—in a word, twine your heart around him. Then one dark day comes Sir Joseph, pokes him in the ribs, makes him squeal, says "Twenty-two dollars a hundred at the hoof" and ravishes him away. You may be able to do that to a pet pig. I couldn't. If I did I'd never be able to look a sausage in the face again.—H.F.G. in Saturday Night

Soldiers of the soil arise, you hear your country's call
To arms to arms, my comrades, should include both great and small
Our mother earth supplies us, and on her we must depend
To aid, to fight for Justice, Freedom so you must assistance lend.
Your work excels all other work, its value can't be told,
What you produce in fools to eat is worth its weight in gold.
Now boys, step nobly to the front, and show what can be done
With plow and hoe, and seeds to sow, the battle's partly won.
Pour out your valour on the soil that waits your human aid,
Strike farmer soldier, show results, and you will be repaid,
The trench you dig will help to win and you will bless the day
God gave you health, desire and strength, a noble part to play.
Your hand is on the throttle now—ahead you go, full steam
You'll make the grade, don't be afraid, altho it hard may seem,
For uphill work will make you strong, to do your duty right,
And its results will help our boys to make a braver fight.
Reward will come for work well done and surely length of days
To men and boys and women—who deserve our utmost praise
Then on the flaming forge of life, we'll let our blows be strong.
We'll into ploughshares beat our swords, with praises loud and long,
When time is ripe we will win, and make our anvil ring
With sturdy blows, we've beat our foes, and then with joy we'll sing
With anthems loud, all will be proud, and feel like bird on wing,
Who soars on high and sings his praise to God, our Heavenly King.

BACKYARD POULTRY PAY

How Seventy-six Hours Gave a Profit of $58.29.

SUGGESTIONS FOR FARMER

Spraying Material Should Be Ordered Early This Year—Keep the Farming Mill Going—Work In the Dairy, Stable and in the Orchard.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

HOW A PROFIT of $58.29 was made from twenty-six hens, which turned the table scraps, and $26.13 worth of feed into $84.42 worth of eggs is described in a recent circular of the Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa.

The birds were not selected with a view to the greatest production possible, but rather to the securing of such a flock as any amateur might go out and purchase. The flock consisted of twenty-six birds—four of which were three-year-old Black Leghorn hens, six White Leghorn pullets and one Black Minorca pullet hatched in May, and the balance were crossbreds Black and White Leghorns, hatched in June. They were not put into winter quarters until well on in November, and it was December 7th before the first egg was laid.

How the Flock Was Kept.

An old wood shed about eleven by twelve feet was utilized as a poultry house. In the south side, fifteen inches from the floor a line of windows two feet wide was placed and above these an opening about eighteen inches wide was made across the entire front. In this a frame, covered with light cotton, was hinged. This frame was kept hooked up to the ceiling through the day, except in the severest weather.

Hoppers of oyster shell, beef scraps and dry mash were kept constantly before the flock. The dry mash consisted of bran, middlings and cornmeal, equal parts, one-half part ginger and one-half part blood flour. A deep straw litter was kept on the floor into which all whole grain feed was scattered.

In the morning, mixed grain, usually cracked corn, wheat and oats, equal parts, was given. At the same time warmed water was given. At noon the water was renewed and all the kitchen waste, such as vegetable parings, was fed. Usually at this time a few handfuls of mixed grain were also scattered.

The methods followed were such as almost any city dweller could follow. A very small place for a house and no yard room are required. By buying pullets in the fall and selling them when poultry is high in the early summer the most will be had out of the flock without interfering in any way with either your own or your neighbor's back-yard garden.

Timely Agricultural Suggestions.

Seed grain and root seeds secured from the best sources available and in ample quantities for spring seeding are a most profitable investment at this time of the year. It is not too late to germinate seeds of various kinds of farm crops to determine their suitability for spring seed. A poor seed sown is a seed wasted—and food is too scarce to waste any of it this year.

Plenty of exercise for the breeding animals will insure stronger and more profitable young.

When the work is not too pressing, get the fanning mill busy to ensure a good supply of sound, plump seed grain free from weed seeds. The oftener the seed is put through the fanning mill the larger and plumper the grain will be, and the fewer the weed seeds in it. Always avoid sowing sunken grain and weed seeds—they are about the poorest investment a man can make.

Secure an ample supply of spraying material now. Bluestone will be required for spraying potatoes, iron sulphate for spraying mustard, lime sulphur for the fruit trees and paris green or arsenate of lead for potato beetles and other insect pests. Be sure to secure the supply of formalin for treating seed grain to prevent smutt and for treating potatoes to prevent scab. One pint of Formalin is sufficient to treat from 20 to 30 bushels of grain and the same amount will treat from 40 to 45 bushels of potatoes. Keep the Formalin bottle well corked and do not leave it in a place where it is likely to be frozen.

Securing farm labor will be the great problem in agriculture this year. Write to the Ontario Government Public Employment Bureau, 15 Queen's Park, and also consult your agricultural representative. Put in your order early with these men and you may get the help you require—and without cost.

The ideal temperature in the dairy stable, combined with good air, is between 50 and 60 degrees Fahrenheit. It is a good plan to have a reliable thermometer hanging at some central point in the stable and note the variation in the temperature from day to day. On fine days turn all the cattle outside for an hour in the sunshine. It may mean a little less milk, but it will be paid for in the improvement of the health of the young stock.

The trees in the apple orchard may be scraped down now, so as to make more effective the later spraying of the trunk and the main branches. Egg masses of the Tussock moth, conspicuously white against the dark bark, may be removed by means of a wire brush or hook on a pole.—Ontario Agricultural College Notes.

THE TOWN COUNCIL

Deals with a Lot of Matters More or Less Important At Monday night's Session

The Town Council held its monthly April session Monday night, all members present.

Sticks Up For The Hog

Dr. Porter, Medical Health Officer, suggested that the Council allow citizens to raise pigs to help production. The doctor did not agree with those people who claim that the pig is a filthy animal. It is one of the few domestic animals, he stated, that will not foul its own nest. The Councillors favored pig-raising provided the premises be kept clean but considered it a matter for the Board of Health to deal with. This means that the citizens will likely be given a chance to keep pigs this summer.

Company pays $6000

Town Clerk Collins reported that he had received a cheque from the Knechtel Furniture Co. paying in full the company's indebtedness to the town. The town's mortgage against the factory and plant was ordered to be discharged.

Tax Collector Crawford reported he had collected $28,014.57 and turned it in to the Merchants' Bank.

John Neilly and other citizens, petitioned to have Durham St. from Yonge St. to the Exhibition grounds oiled or sprinkled.

Coun. Lippert said that street oil could not be bought this year at any price and he suggested that the people who wish to have the street in front of their property watered be given a chance to petition the Council. This will be done.

Cut Off Fire Phones

The Fire Underwriters Association wrote that it was quite unnecessary for the Council to maintain phones in private houses for fire protection purposes at Messrs. Arscott's and McGregor's. The Council will thereby contract with the Bell Telephone Co. for phones at the Town Hall and Pumping Station only.

The Hydro Radial Association invited the Council to become a member by forwarding the annual fee of $3 per thousand of population—Fyled.

Tenders for the Exhibition grounds pasture for the coming summer were received as follows:—Thos. McIntee $31 Oliver McConnel $40, Alex George $36, Irwin Bros. $48.

Milk Dealer Warned.

Chief Ferguson reported that he had taken three tests from Dippel's milk wagons and the tests were.— 3.2, 3.2 and 2.9. The test required by the by-law is 3.0. As this is the first time Mr Dippel's test has come below 3, the Council decided not to prosecute but the Chief was instructed to warn him that prosecution would follow the next time the milk was found to be below 3.

Wingefelder and Krueger were the only tenderers for the Bend Pasture They offered $16.

Chief Ferguson and Night Watchman Swanston put in their request for the usual suit of new Uniform.

Mr. Art Wesley asked the Council if they were not going to do something to protect the public against sour milk. He stated that scores of citizens had been complaining about sour milk and he wanted the by-law amended.

Mayor Johnston replied that such a difficulty would soon adjust itself. If a milk dealer had sour milk he wouldn't sell it very long.

Reeve Douglas handed the clerk a communication from the Warden urging that the Council use every effort to increase production this coming summer to raise food for the Allies. Mayor Johnston said he believed probably all the vacant land in town would be used for gardening and he didn't know anything further the Council could do.

Trains To Be On Again

Letters were read from the Railway Board and the G.T.R. in reply to communication for Town Clerk Collins, giving the Council assurance that the train service on the G.T.R. would be increased on or about April 28th.

Nothing Doing, Says C. P. R.

The C. P. R. replied to the Council's petition, which had been sent to the railway company at the suggestion of Mr. D. Robertson, stating that there was no coming in the suggestion to have the C. P. R. local train wait at Saugeen Junction to connect with the mixed train. It would mean that the engine would be idle burning coal at Saugeen all day and it would mean big increase in wages.

High Constable Briggs wrote the Council asking that he be given a list of the County Constables for Walkerton before May 1st. and that any of the present list be added to or cut down as the Council saw fit. On motion of Coun. Lippert and Vogan the names of Constables S. Fisk and Carl McKay were struck off, both having left town.

The tender of Irwin Bros. for the Exhibition pasture and of Wingefelder and Krueger for the Bend pasture were accepted.

Plan your garden early. The crop of salad and young onions will soon grace the tables of the thrifty with the warm April showers to make them grow. And a good feed of onions will make you so strong, without any other truck, that you can save money by eating less.

A very unfortunate accident befell three young cattle belonging to Mr J. H. Wahl on the 10th con last week. During the warm days the animals had been let out of the stables for a little sunning. When three young animals failed to return a search was made and they were discovered in the swamp where they had strayed. They had broken through the ice and were drowned.—Mildmay Gazette.

Removing To Guelph.

Their many friends in town will regret to learn that Mrs. P. Sweeney and family are leaving Walkerton after many years residence here, to make their home at Guelph. They expect to leave before the end of the present month.

A Near-Fire.

What might have provec a serious fire was started by some mischievious children playing in a vacant lot in the west Ward on Friday afternoon. The dead grass in the lot got going and the wind fanned the flame until the fence caught. The flame s nearly reached Granger's barn, when they were got under control by some men who happened along.

The Trinket Fund Committee wishes to remind the public that they are still receiving trinkets of gold and silver, also brass, copper, lead etc. These can be left at Mrs. Gronenbach's, Mrs. Wife's or Mrs. Warren's, or leave word with them and they will see that they are collected, as they wish to send another box away in the beginning of June.

Canadian Tommy Got It

Orlando Fisk, son of Mr. John Fisk, wrote his name on a card and wrapped it around a cake of maple sugar, which was packed in a box for the soldiers several months ago. Orlando was pleasantly surprised lately to receive a nice letter from a Canada Tommy, Pte. F. W. Waters, telling him how much he enjoyed the sugar. Pte. Waters, whose home town is in Ingersoll, is with a Canadian Highland Regiment from Montreal.

Farm Fire Prevention

The protection from fire of farm properties is a problem which has seldom been attempted in any practical way, aside from an exceptional use of fire-proofing materials. In a small town in Ohio, Hollandsburg, the villagers and farmers within a radius of five miles have combined forces. They have purchased a motor truck equipped with chemical extinguishers, ladders, etc., and arrangements have been made for answering fire calls anywhere in the district. If this experiment proves successful, a wide-spread adoption of the plan may follow.

A Big Work.

Some idea of the extent of the work which the Daughters of the Empire have been doing in Walkerton, may be gleaned from a report for the Government which has just been prepared by Mrs. E. J. Skelton treasurer of the local chapter. Besides the immense amount of sewing and knitting which the ladies have done since the beginning of the war, they have raised in cash about seven thousand dollars. The actual figures are $6,990.89. Some of the items of expenditure have been:— For material $3688.25, Soldiers Boxes, $222.33; Belgian Relief $60, British Red Cross $75; Christmas Fund $25; Tobacco $35.75, Motor Ambulance $315.14, I.O.D.E. Annex $25, 160th. Brass Band $25, Y. M. C. A. $100, French Relief $50, Halifax Relief $55, Navy League $100, Prison Fund $117.

"Yes," was the answer, "I am far happier now than when I was on earth with you." "Tell me, John, what is it like in Heaven?" exclaimed John, "I'm not in Heaven."

Ask Early Closing by-law

A petition is being circulated among business men of the town asking the Town Council to declare a half-holiday every Thursday afternoon during May, June, July and August, and to have the stores close at 6 p. m. daily except Saturdays and holidays. The idea has been carried out in many neighboring towns for years and this year it is being specially boosted to help production.

Costs More and More

During the past year the cost of producing a local newspaper has increased tremendously. The cost of publishing the Telescope has gone up more than proportionately on account of our changing from the big "patent inside" to the smaller but more expensive all-local all-home print sheet. That the public appreciate the change, is evidenced by a substantial growth in our circulation the past year. Telescope readers can help us make this paper all that it should be by meeting their financial obligations to us promptly.

Asked To Give Twice

Newspaper publishers are asked to do what is asked of no other calling. They are expected to give twice as individuals to the various subscription lists for patriotic purposes which are presented to them, and as publishers by giving away that which is to them the chief support of the business which they conduct. Journalists are willing to bear their fair share of the common sacrifice, but they do not expect that they alone should be asked to make a double sacrifice.—Brantford Expositor.

Farmerettes Are Ready

The services of young ladies to help on the farms this summer are now available through the Agricultural Department at Toronto. Any Bruce farmers who want assistance in the field can secure the same by communicating with the local office of the Dept. The farmerettes go in groups of five and tens and will camp out in tents, except where a suitable building is available. According to the circular sent out by the Dept. most young ladies are "fond of animals", although it doesn't state what species of animal. We anticipate a rush on the part of the farmers to have their help troubles solved by pretty farmerettes.

Aunt Sally's Letter

To the Readers of
The Walkerton Telescope

Dear Friends,

Our ministers, several Sundays ago read from the pulpit a list of articles the Food Controller had carefully prepared. It was a food allowance for a family of five for one week. The family consisted of a man and his wife; a boy of 12 yrs. and two children 9 and 4 yrs. We presume the allowance is what is needed to keep such a family in good physical condition.

For most of us the cost of the food is of first importance, so I have enquired the present prices of each article so that we can get some idea whether we can afford to eat to live. For no one would venture to live to eat.

Here is the list considered necessary for one week.

1. Meats and Meat substitutes
4 lbs. lean meat	$1.20
2 lbs. fresh fish	.40
1 lb. salt fish	.15
1 doz. eggs	.40
1 lb. cheese	.35
2 lbs. dried beans	.50
2. Fats
2 lbs. butter or oleomargine	.70
1 lb. cooking fat	.35
3. Milk
7 qts. whole milk	.63
4. Sugars
3 lbs. sugar	.30
1 lb corn syrup, molasses or honey	.10
5. Cereal Products
10 lbs. flour	.90
10 lbs. cereals in other forms	.80
6 Fresh Vegetables
40 lbs. potatoes	.90
14 lbs. fresh vegetables	.42
7. Fruits
14 lbs. according to season	1.40
Total cost for one week	$8.95

This amount $8.95 does not include the cost of cooking the meals and we all agree that fuel is expensive too.

It looks to me as if the Food Controller could get some hints on economy from many poor families who cannot afford his generous allowance and yet continue to live

Faithfully yours
Aunt Sally.

Death of Geo. Wills

Mr. George Wills, a respected resident of the South Ward, passed away at his home on Sunday night from heart trouble Mr. Wills had recently returned home from the County Hospital where he had been a patient for some time. He was quiet and industrious and of a kindly disposition. He was born on the 12th of Carrick and for many years was employed by Mr. Duncan K. Smith on the farm. Latterly he worked his five acre property near the cemetery. His wife who was formerly Miss Bilger, survives him, also two brothers and three sisters. The funeral was held on Wednesday afternoon, service being conducted by Rev. J. H. Grenzebach, pastor of the Evangelical Church. Service was held at the Church after the funeral. The reverend gentleman spoke on the fleeting nature of human life taking for his text James 4:14. He stated that in the course of his visits to the departed brother he had found him reconciled and prepared to meet his Maker.

He crawled along the fence and saw a good Samaritan standing in the yard with a lantern who immediately helped them out of their difficulty. The city man then inquired if the lane led straight to the road but instead took the ploughed mud in the field. Finally he landed home on the verge of exhaustion and enjoyed a well earned rest after a hard experience on the farm.

What might have developed into the worst conflagration in the burg's history and resulted in the destruction of the lower end of our metropolis, had it not been promptly discovered, was a blaze in the attic of Jno. Coumans Sr's dwelling house last Sunday afternoon, the fire originating from overheated pipes. With a strong wind prevailing it is matter for conjecture where the flames would have spent themselves, had they gained considerable headway. As it was the efforts of the bucket brigade which was hastily summoned quickly brought the blaze under control and the resultant material damage was therefore slight.

Rev. Father Goodrow is spending the week in Buffalo and Hamilton.

EDEN GROVE

In the Walkerton Telescope of Apr. 4th appears an article concerning the proposed presentation to a farmer about to leave Riversdale wherever the divil that may be. This gentleman is now residing at the Grove and we feel rather amused at the manner in which his late neighbors displayed the size of their hearts. It is stated that they planned a royal send off at the next farm. What is meant by royal? Royal. It is to laugh. And at the next farm, the worthy writer maybe in a little short sighted and couldn't see the two farms between. They almost risked their lives. Almost risked. That's good too. Lets all laugh.

Instead of gathering together at his home and bringing their presents (chairs I'll bet a dollar) with them, chose another farm house the width of three hundred acres away and deputed one of their number to lead him through the dark over the same "dangerous" roads to where they had planned a game of bull in the ring with Jeremiah as the bull.

Quite rightly he refused. When with zealous zeal and itching palms they sold the "handsome" presents after considerable squabbling and cackling (do you know our rag man?) the huge sum was turned over to the Red Cross and the generous big hearted chaps straggled home again almost risking their lives.

Next morning one of the best of them felt a little cheap it is claimed and as an excuse gave out that the reason the gifts were not brought and presented properly to their owner was because his horses had the distemper. I am afraid the distemper was not confined to the short eared breed. (At that, Jeremiah, I would have taken the chairs)

EDEN GROVE

For every individual that loses his high position in life, there is always someone to stay in and fill their place. Quality Hill has a new arrival. One of St. Thomas' prominent and well known business men has decided to locate his suburban residence in the old Todd Mansion Nell Thompson, son-in-law of John Killer, with his wife and family are to be our new aristocrats. The Hill people are to be congratulated on their success in acquiring such worthy industrious successors to their late neighbors. We unite with them in wishing happiness and extending the hand of welcome to the new arrivals to Eden Grove's show place—Quality Hill.

We understand that Dr. Bricker M. D. of our largest suburb, Cargill, has purchased a Ford Runabout from Cargill Ltd. We congratulate him on securing a runabout as his last auto would not run about.

Bruce County is about to be asked for $45,000 toward a three million dollars objective to aid the Y.M.C.A. in their work work for the Allies in France. My informant, the Rev. Mr. Storey, leader of the Methodist Flock, claims the work of this body of men is beyond praise, and it helps in keeping up the spirits of the boys in the trenches. I suppose the spirits they now deny us are to go to the boys in the trenches. Let's go and fight.

Speaking of bubbles why not present our worthy Methodist Divine with a Ford car? The dust could be raised by extracting five per cent of the collection for one or two services eh what? If he got the car he could raise the dust himself me.be.

The Red Cross (thank the Lord my wife is neither) intend giving a dance Friday April 12th in the lordly edifice known as Ward's Hall. The building will be nicely decorated for the occasion In order to give forth a Military effect all the windows will be a little drafty.

When you think all hell's let loose
And the rackets made you timid as a goose
And your nerves are all torn in tatters
When you're as jumpy as a kid
And you think your gun's out of your lid
Don't worry! It's nothing that matters
When behind you hear a bang-bang-bang
Don't look round, let him go hang
Or Scott's motor bike will tear your nerves to shatters

KINLOSS

Mr. Lawrence Stirling and a few more of our sports took in the debate of the Literary Society on the South Line Wednesday night.

Mr. McDermit has moved into the house lately vacated by Mr. Frank Cole. Mr. McDermit when a young lad played checkers with the King. Then when he grew older he took up a sailor life. Then he moved to the States and when the big high school in Duluth was built he was over one hundred and twenty men. He built the big tower and helped to place the clock that is still telling the people the time to eat and drink.

Mr. Zettler of Salem has been busily engaged cutting wood in the neighborhood for the past two weeks.

A very enjoyable evening was spent in the village by a number of our young people. A small programme was rendered. One young fellow who was called on unexpectedly got up and recited at random, the first of it running like this:—

Though the mud and water
Be up to my chin
Will I go on forever
The boy stood on the burning deck
But I'll forget her never.

A very good song entitled "The Golden Slippers" was very well rendered. A few other good selections were given and the friends departed for their respective homes.

The Red Cross held their regular meeting and supper Saturday afternoon and evening, the proceeds amounting to over $8. Some of the young lads found an old bottle or keg and got a smell and acted quite gay for a while, which made some of the people very angry. If they must get the glad-eye once in a while, supposing it could without they should not bother the ladies. For if you see a drunk man, beware! But if you know where there is liquor in the cellar, be there.

The afternoon was successful. Miss Parcher and Mr. Watson joined the other group with alacrity, and the five young people were presently seated together upon the steps of the porch, sending their voices out upon the air and up to Mr. Parcher's window in the song they found loveliest that summer.

The singers thought so highly of the words that Mr. Parcher missed not one, especially as the vocal rivalry between Josie-Joe and Ickle Boy Baxter incited each of them to prevent Miss Pratt from hearing the other.

William sang loudest of all. Mr. Parcher had at no time any difficulty in recognizing his voice.

Oh, I love my love in the morning.
And I love my love at night;
I love my love in the dawning
And when the stars are bright.
Some may love the sunshine,
Others may love the dew;
Some may love the raindrops,
But I love only you-oo-oo!
By the stars up above
It is you I ish-luvi
Yes, I love own-lay you!

They sang it four times; then Mr. Bullitt sang his solo, "Tell Her, O Golden Moon, How I Adore Her," William following with "The Violets Love the Cowslip, but I Love Yew," and after that they all sang "Oh, I Love My Love In the Morning" again. All this while that they sang of love Mr. Parcher was moving to and fro upon his bed, not more than eighteen feet in an oblique upward slanting line from the heads of the serenaders.

* * * * * *

Miss Jane Baxter opened her eyes upon the newborn day, and her first thoughts were of Mr. Parcher—that is, he was already in her mind when she awoke, a circumstance to be accounted for, on the ground that his conversation during her quiet convalescence in his library had so fascinated her that in all likelihood she had been dreaming of him.

Then, too, Jane and Mr. Parcher had a bond in common, though Mr. Parcher did not know it. Not without result had William repeated Miss Pratt's inquiry in Jane's hearing, "Who is that curious child?" Jane had preserved her sang froid, but the words remained with her, for she was one of those who ponder and retain in silence.

CHAPTER VI.

Jane Meets Mr. Parcher.

JANE thought almost exclusively of Mr. Parcher until breakfast time and resumed her thinking of him at intervals during the morning. Then, in the afternoon, a series of quiet events not unconnected with William's passion caused her to think of Mr. Parcher more poignantly than ever. Who can say, then, that it was not by design that she came face to face with Mr. Parcher on the public highway at about 5 o'clock that afternoon?

Mr. Parcher was walking home from his office, and he walked slowly, gulping from time to time as he thought of the inevitable evening before him. His was not a rugged constitution, and for the last fortnight or so he had feared that it was giving way altogether.

Walking more and more slowly as he approached the dwelling he had once thought of as home, he became aware of a little girl in a checkered dress approaching him at a gait varied by the indifferent behavior of a barrel hoop which she was disciplining with a stick held in her right hand. When the hoop behaved well she came ahead rapidly; when it affected to be intoxicated, which was most often its whim, she zigzagged with it and gained little ground. But all the while, and without reference to what went on concerning the hoop, she slowly and continuously fed herself (with her left hand) small, solemnly relished bites of a slice of bread and butter covered with apple sauce and powdered sugar.

Mr. Parcher looked upon her, and he shivered slightly, for he knew her to be Willie Baxter's sister.

Jane checked her hoop and halted.

"G'd afternoon, Mr. Parcher."

"Good afternoon," he returned.

Jane looked up at him trustfully and with a strange, unconscious fondness. "You goin' home now, Mr. Parcher?" she asked.

"I suppose so," he murmured.

"My brother Willie's been at your house all afternoon," she remarked.

He repeated, "I suppose so," but in a tone of hopeless animosity.

"He just went home," said Jane. "He kept lookin' back at your house. Miss Pratt was on the porch."

"I suppose so," with a moan.

"My brother Willie isn't comin' back to your house tonight, but he doesn't know it yet."

"What!" exclaimed Mr. Parcher.

"Willie isn't goin' to spend any more evenings at your house at all," said Jane thoughtfully. "He isn't, but he doesn't know it yet."

Mr. Parcher gazed fixedly at the wonderful child, and something like a ray of sunshine flickered over his harried face. "Are you sure he isn't?" he said.

"Willie isn't going to spend any more evenings at your House."

"I know he isn't," said demure Jane. "It's on account of somep'n I told mamma."

A new feeling budded within his bosom. He was warmly attracted to Jane. He wished the Bullitt and Watson families each had a little girl like this

"He'll come in the afternoons, I guess," said Jane. "But you aren't home then, Mr. Parcher, except late, like you were that day of the Sunday school class. It was on account of what you said that day. I told mamma what you said."

Mr. Parcher's perplexity continued. "What about?"

"About Willie. You know!" Jane smiled.

"No, I don't."

"It was when I was layin' in the liberry that day of the Sunday school class," Jane told him. "You an' Mrs. Parcher was talkin' in there about Miss Pratt an' Willie an' everything."

"Good heavens!" said Mr. Parcher, summoning his memory. "Did you hear all that?"

"Yes." Jane nodded.

"Murder!"

"Well," said Jane, "I guess it's good I did, because look—that's the very reason mamma did somep'n so's he can't come any more except in daytime. I guess she thought Willie ought'n to behave so'st you said so many tidings about him like that. So today she did somep'n, an' now he can't come any more to behave that loving way to Miss Pratt that you said you would be in the lunatic asylum if he didn't quit. But he hasn't found it out yet."

"Found what out, please?" he asked.

"He hasn't found out he can't come back to your house tonight, an' he can't come back tomorrow night, nor day after tomorrow night, nor"—

"Is it because your mamma is going to tell him he can't?"

"No, Mr. Parcher. Mamma says he's too old, an' she said she didn't like to, anyway. She just did somep'n."

"What? What did she do?"

"It's a secret," said Jane. "I could tell you the first part of it—up to where the secret begins, I expect."

"Do!" Mr. Parcher urged.

"Well, it's about somep'n Willie's been wearin'," Jane began, moving closer to him as they slowly walked onward. "I can't tell you what they were, because that's the secret, but he had 'em on him every evening when he came to see Miss Pratt, but they belong to papa, an' papa doesn't know a word about it.

"Well, one evening papa wanted to put 'em on, because he had a right to, Mr. Parcher, an' Willie didn't have any right to at all, but mamma couldn't find 'em, an' she rummidged an' rummidged 'most all next day an' pretty near every day since then an' never did find 'em, until don't you believe I saw Willie inside of 'em only last night! He was startin' over to your house to see Miss Pratt in 'em. So I told mamma, an' she said it'd had to be a secret, so that's why I can't tell you what they were.

"Well, an' then this afternoon, early, I was with her, an' she said, long as I had told her the secret in the first place, I could come in Willie's room with her, an' we both were already in there anyway, 'cause I was kind of thinkin' maybe she'd go in there to look for 'em, Mr. Parcher."

"I see," he said admiringly. "I see."

"Well, they were under Willie's window seat, all folded up, an' mamma said she wondered what she better do, an' she was worried because she didn't like to have Willie behave so'st you an' Mrs. Parcher thought that way about him. So she said the—the secret—what Willie wears, you know, but they're really pena's an' aren't Willie's any morn'n they're mine—well, she said the secret was gettin' a little teeny bit too tight for papa, but she guessed they—I mean the secret—she said she guessed it was already pretty loose for Willie. So she wrapped it up, an' I went with her, an' we took 'em to a tailor, an' she told him to make 'em bigger, for a surprise for papa, 'cause then they'll fit him again, Mr. Parcher.

"She said he must let 'em way, way out! So I guess Willie would look too funny in 'em after they're fixed. An', anyway, Mr. Parcher, the secret won't be home from the tailor's for two weeks, an' maybe by that time Miss Pratt'll be gone."

They had reached Mr. Parcher's gate. He halted and looked down fondly upon this child who seemed to have read his soul. "Do you honestly think so?" he asked.

"Well, anyway, Mr. Parcher," said Jane, "mamma said—well, she said she's sure Willie wouldn't come here in the evening any more, when you're at home, Mr. Parcher—'cause after he'd been wearin' the secret every night this way he wouldn't like to come an' not have the secret on. Mamma said the reason he would feel like that was because he was seventeen years old. An' she isn't goin' to tell him anything about it, Mr. Parcher. She said that's the best way."

Mr. Parcher rested an elbow upon the gatepost, gazing down with ever increasing esteem. "Of course I knew your last name," he said, "but I'm afraid I've forgotten your other one."

"It's Jane."

"Jane," said Mr. Parcher, "I should like to do something for you."

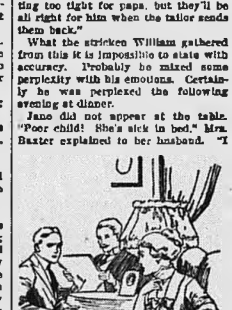
Jane looked down, and with eyes modestly lowered she swallowed the last fragment of the bread and butter and apple sauce and sugar which had been the constantly evanescent companion of their little walk together. She was not mercenary; she had sought no reward.

"Well, I guess I must run home," she said. She scampered quickly away.

But, though she cared for no reward, the extraordinary brilliancee of William that evening after dinner must at least have been of great interest to her. He ascended to his own room directly from the table, but about twenty minutes later came down to the library, where Jane was sitting with her father and mother.

William looked from one to the other of his parents and seemed about to speak, but did not do so. Instead he departed for the upper floor again and presently could be heard moving about energetically in various parts of the house a remote thump finally indicating that he was doing something with a trunk in the attic.

After that he came down to the library again and once more seemed about to speak, but did not. Then he went upstairs again and came down again, and he was still repeating this process when Jane's time limit was reached, and she repaired conscientiously to her little bed. Her mother came to hear her prayers and to turn out the light, and when Mrs. Baxter had passed out into the hall after that Jane heard her speaking to William, who was now conducting what seemed to be excavations on a serious scale in his own room.



"Oh, Willie, perhaps I didn't tell you, but you remember I'd been missing papa's evening clothes and looking everywhere for days and days?"

"Ye-es," huskily from William.

"Well, I found them. And where do you suppose I'd put them? I found them under your window seat. Can you think of anything more absurd than putting them there and then forgetting it? I took them to the tailor's to have them let out. They were getting too tight for papa, but they'll be all right for him when the tailor sends them back."

What the stricken William gathered from this it is impossible to state with accuracy. Probably he mixed some perplexity with his emotions. Certainly he was perplexed the following evening at dinner.

Jane did not appear at the table. "Poor child! She's sick in bed," Mrs. Baxter explained to her husband. "I was out this afternoon, and she ate nearly all of a five pound box of candy."

"I'm afraid Jane has begun her first affair."

Both the sad eyed William and his father were dumfounded. "Where on earth did she get a five pound box of candy?" Mr. Baxter demanded.

"I'm afraid Jane has begun her first affair," said Mrs. Baxter. "A gentleman sent it to her."

"What gentleman?" roared William.

And in his mother's eyes as they slowly came to rest on his in reply he was aware of an inscrutability strongly reminiful of that inscrutable look of Jane's.

"Mr. Parcher," she said gently.

* * * * * * *

Evening after evening passed while William sat dreaming painfully of Mr. Parcher's porch, but in the daytime, though he did not literally make hay while the sun shone, he at least gathered a harvest somewhat resembling hay in general character.

Thus: One afternoon, having locked his door to secure himself against intrusion, William seated himself at his writing table and from a drawer therein took a small cardboard box, which he uncovered, placing the contents before him upon the table. In the box were:

A faded rose; several other faded roses, disintegrated into leaves; three withered "four leaf clovers;" a white ribbon still faintly smelling of violets; a small silver shoe buckle; a large pearl button; a small pearl button; a tortoise shell hairpin; a cross section from the heel of a small slipper; a stringy remnant, probably once an improvised wreath of daisies; four or five withered dandelions; other dried vegetation of a nature now indistinguishable.

His gentle eyes showed his emotion.

CHAPTER VII.

Progress of the Symptoms.

WILLIAM'S writing table was beside an open window, through which came an indistinct whirring, unagreeable to his mood, and, looking down upon the sunny lawn, he beheld three lowly creatures. One was Genesis, cutting the grass; another was Clematis—he had assumed a transient attitude, curiously triangular, in order to scratch his ear—the third was Jane. In one hand she held a little stack of sugar sprinkled wafers, which she slowly but steadily depleted. Wearing unaccustomed garments of fashion and festivity, Jane stood, in speckless, starchy white and a blue sash, watching the lawn mower spout showers of grass as the powerful Genesis easily propelled it across the grass.

Clematis found his ear too pliable for any great solace from his foot. Ilising, he permitted his nose to lead him, with the result that it touched the rim of the last wafer in Jane's external possession.

This incident annoyed William. "Look there!" he called from the window. "You mean to eat that cake after the dog's had his face on it?"

"It wasn't his face," Jane observed.

"Well, if it wasn't his face, I'd like to know what"—

"It wasn't his face," Jane repeated. "It was his nose. It wasn't all of his nose touched it either. It was only a little outside piece of his nose."

"Well, are you going to eat that cake, I ask you?"

Jane broke off a small bit of the wafer. She gave the bit to Clematis and slowly ate what remained, continuing to watch Genesis and apparently unconscious of the scorching gaze from the window.

"I never saw anything so disgusting as long as I've lived!" William announced. "I wouldn't 'a' believed it if anybody'd told me a sister of mine would eat after"—

"I didn't," said Jane. "I like Clematis, anyway."

"Ye gods!" her brother cried. "Do you think that makes it any better? And, by the way," he continued in a tone of even greater severity, "I'd like to know where you got those cakes. Where'd you get 'em, I'd just like to inquire?"

"In the pantry." Jane turned and moved toward the house. "I'm goin' in for some more now."

William uttered a cry. These little cakes were sacred. His mother, growing curious to meet a visiting lady of whom, so to speak, she had heard much and thought more, had asked May Parcher to bring her guest for iced tea that afternoon. A few others of congenial age had been invited. There was to be a small matinee, in fact, for the honor and pleasure of the son of the house, and the cakes of Jane's onslaught were part of Mrs. Baxter's preparations.

William bled himself to the pantry with such advantage of longer legs that within the minute he and the wafers appeared in conjunction before his mother, who was arranging fruit and flowers upon a table in the living room.

William entered in the stained glass attitude of one bearing gifts. Overhead both hands supported a tin pan well laden with small cakes and wafers, for which Jane was silently but repeatedly and systematically jumping. Even under the stress of these efforts her expression was cool and collected. She maintained the self possession that was characteristic of her.

Not so with William. His cheeks were flushed, his eyes indignant. "You see what this child is doing?" he demanded. "Are you going to let her ruin everything?"

"Ruin?" Mrs. Baxter repeated absently, refreshing with fair water a bowl of flowers upon the table. "Ruin?"

"Yes, ruin!" William was hotly emphatic. "If you don't do something with her it'll all be ruined before Miss Pe—before they even get here!"

Mrs. Baxter laughed. "Set the pan down, Willie."

"Set it down?" he echoed incredulously. "With that child in the room and grabbing like"—

"There!" Mrs. Baxter took the pan from him, placed it upon a chair and with the utmost coolness selected four wafers and gave them to Jane. "I'd already promised she could have five more. You know the doctor said Jane

A Brant Pioneer

On Friday March 29th, there passed away one of the pioneers of Brant Township, in the person of James Delomere Reilly (better known as Dell) after an illness of a little over two months. The deceased was born in Adjala Tp., Simcoe County, in the year 1839 and came to Bruce County in 1855 and settled on lot 21, con. 15, where he continued to live up to the time of his death. His wife predeceased him about ten years ago. He leaves a family of two sons and one daughter all of whom were at his bedside when he passed away. They are as follows: James on the 14th. con., Joseph on the old home, Mrs. J. McGill, Owen Sound. In religion, he was a devout Roman Catholic. The funeral was held on Monday morning to St. Michael's church, North Brant, where mass was celebrated by Rev. Father Hoffarth after which the remains were placed in the cemetery beside those of his late wife. The pallbearers were: Messrs. H. Ferguson, Wm. McGill, Wm. Ryan, Joseph Ward, G. Kirkwood and James Rae. The funeral was largely attended.

The Wolves Were Hungry

Angus McGregor and his collie dog left the Canadian Pacific Railway main line at Kamloops and went north and west for six days to get into good trapping and hunting territory for a winter's work. They made several trips before the snow came and shut them in. When winter shut down there was much cold weather and not an excessive amount of snow. The rabbits drifted north to the thicker brush, and McGregor and his dog extended their lines twenty miles further. Big snow came and the wolves found hard work to get living, though the rabbits and partridges were fat and contented. McGregor took a lot of fur, mink, lynx, coyote and fox.

One day while on the trail of a moose he saw a big black wolf looking down. The collie saw it too and dashed to the conflict. The wolf turned and fled, and when the man topped the rise he saw his dog nearly a half mile away still fiercely pursuing the wolf which had just entered the mouth of a steeply sloped draw. Half way up the draw the wolf stopped, and down from either bank swept two more wolves. The first brute had acted as decoy for the dog.

The collie, realizing his danger, wheeled and ran toward his master, pursued by all three of the park. He led them by a few yards, and threw himself finally against the feet of McGregor, while the wolves, gaunt, hungry and unusually fierce came, right on and only swerved aside to circle when the man yelled. One he shot before the others fled, and a few days later, having placed out "baits" he had the satisfaction of picking up the other two big, black bodies.

Watch out for Tom!

Tom Bennet has blood in his eye, and there is going to be trouble on for somebody in this town. Tom owned a cart last fall, but when he went to look for the vehicle this spring it could not be located. He did a little detective work and finally found a clue that may lead to its recovery. He says the cart has been painted over so that he could not identify it, but it takes something thicker than paint to fool Tom. The guilty parties are warned to return the cart to save trouble.—Mildmay Gazette.

Good Work Remembered

Mr. H. S. Sanderson, son of Rev. and Mrs. J. W. Sanderson, who recently gave up the Public School Principalship at Chesley, to become M. A. Halliday's right hand man, was given a big public send-off in the Town Hall at which all classes of citizens were represented. An address was read on behalf of the pupils, ex-pupils, staff and public school board, accompanied by the gift of a beautiful reading lamp, two oak library chairs and an oak library table. The Chairman pointed out that of the 167 pupils in all, which Mr. Sanderson had sent up to the High School Entrance in 11 years, only six failed to pass, 10 took the County gold medal and 1 the East Bruce medal. Mr. Sanderson placed Chesley at the head of the public schools of Bruce and made that town a leading educational centre. Mr Sanderson holds the affections of all who came under his tuition and of the citizens generally.

Would Can the Cop

There has been an agitation lately in some counties to do away with the gaols, and now we note that the Wiarton Canadian goes farther and suggests doing away with the Town Constable. The millenium must surely be at hand up in the Peninsula. While it is gratifying to hear that Wiarton is almost crimeless, we can't help thinnking that a town without a cop would be a tame place for the small boy. It would be like a circus with no peanuts nor pink lemonade.

A HARD LIFE

A farmer returning home one evening from a rural banquet, dropped lazily into a chair and addressed his wife as follows:

"I am all tired out. Are the cows all in the barn?"

"Yes, Henry."

"Horses all fed and bedded down?" he asked as he produced a cigar with a gilt band round it.

"Yes, Henry."

"Chickens aren't locked up, though, are they?"

"Yes, Henry; long ago."

"Wood chopped for morning?"

"Yes."

"Ducks picked and wagon wheel mended for to-morrow's market?"

"Yes, Henry."

The farmer lighted the cigar, yawned and said:

"Well then, just hand me the farm paper and draw me a jug of cider, Mary. I'll turn in soon. Farming's beginning to tell on me."—Boston Transcript.

NEED SOCK DARNING MOTHERS.

(Billy Sunday.)

"I think that a fool mother that will allow a 16 year old sissy to float around town and joyride and hit the cabarets till 2 o'clock in the morning with a counterfeit sport with weak jaws and weaker morals, puffy eyelids, green vest, a pair of spats on—O, she's opening the front door and inviting an and disgrace to cross her threshold.

"If you don't know what kind of company your daughter keeps or what time of night she turns in and hits the hay, I want to tell you that your roar when the tongues of gossip get busy will sound about as pathetic as a wheeze on a Jew's harp.

"I'd give more for one good God fearing pant patching, sock darning, bread-making, praying mother in Israel than I would for a whole trainload of these little frizzle headed sissies of our n my friend, and the way they are living now and how they are going."

Old Implements Come High

Second-hand farm implements are bringing unheard-of prices at the Auction Sales this Spring. At Mr. Jim Cahoon's sale ploughs which he bought ten years ago for $2.50 sold for $12, and a new hayloader for which he paid $80 two years ago went for $101. On the other hand some of the cattle undoubtedly went for less than they were worth considering the high prevailing prices.

Costs More and More

During the past year the cost of producing a local newspaper has increased tremendously. The cost of publishing the Telescope has gone up more than proportionately on account of our changing from the big "patent inside" to the smaller but more expensive all-local all-home print sheet. That the public appreciate the change, is evidenced by a substantial growth in our circulation the past year. Telescope readers can help us make this paper all that it should be by meeting their financial obligations to us promptly.

Helps for Worthy Cause.

The congregation of the Anglican Church, Chesley, have made a generous donation of fruit, groceries and money to the Children's Aid Society. The letter which came with the contribution was read at a Childrens' Aid meeting here Monday afternoon. It stated that the other churches of that town were also preparing to help.

Lots of Licenses

Mayor Johnston, who is issuer of auto licenses for Bruce County, is having a busy time just now. One hundred applications for licenses were received the day before yesterday. So far 300 more applications than last year have been received by the Mayor and it looks as though the number would go way past the thousand mark. Some mean person picked up the Mayor's record book off his table last week, while he was out of town and walked off with it. The book is of no value to anyone but the owner and it will put him to great inconvenience if he doesn't get it back

Inspecting the Roads

Supt. D. J. Izzard of the Bruce Road System was in town on Monday. Mr. Izzard has covered most of the roads taken over by the County, lately by horse and buggy. This he finds the most satisfactory way of familiarizing himself with the condition of the roadways. At many points he finds the farmers have encroached on the highway to such an extent that the roadway is only about 45 feet wide. Farmers who are building fences would do well to see to it that the fence is 33 ft. from the centre of the roadway. The Provincial Dept. requires that all County roads be 66 ft. wide and fences that have been built on the highway will have to be moved back sooner or later to meet this requirement.

Mr. Tuckey, the new deputy registrar arrived here on Monday and has rented a house on Durham St. West from Mrs Schumacher. His family is expected from Toronto in a few days. Mr. Tuckey has two sons and one daughter doing their bit in France.

Have Made Good.

Two former Walkerton boys, who are at present here from the West are good examples of what young men with pluck intelligence and industry can do in the new country. The McCurdy brothers J. L., J. J. and Richard, left Walkerton thirteen years ago to take up home steads, in Saskatchewan. They were mere boys at the time and their main assets were strong right arms and a determination to make it go. Like many homesteaders they had the toughest kind of experience for years but they pulled through on top and now have good properties of their own. J. L.'s fine 320 acre farm in the rich wheat country at Grandora near Saskatoon is nearly all under crop. The two younger brothers each have half-sections in the less thickly settled country at Coleville, Sask. and are both doing well.

Salovy—Snelling

Miss Emma Snelling, who formerly lived here, being employed as a housemaid by Mrs. John A. Rowland, was united in marriage at St. Thomas Rectory on Monday, April 15th, to Mr. Mark Salovy, a returned soldier of Stratford, the ceremony being performed by Rev. R. Perdue.

Expected Home Soon

It is reported that Private Wilfrid McKay, eldest son of Mr. Karl McKay, is expected home from Overseas shortly. Wilfrid enlisted with the 71st in 1915, and after several months' service on the firing line was severely wounded and has been in England since last year. His parents have been preparing to remove to Toronto but in view of his homecoming will not break up home until after their heroic son's arrival.

Grass Fires Cause Trouble

A grass fire starting in the West Ward at the rear of Judge Klein's got beyond control on Tuesday afternoon and ran along the roadway at the south of the Judge's property. A fire alarm was sent in and it was only the timely arrival of the fire brigade that prevented some buildings and fences from catching fire. It is contrary to the by-laws of the town to start these grass fires. It is an exceedingly dangerous practice and Mayor Johnston has issued an order that offenders be prosecuted.

Leaving Walkerton

Mrs W. R. Thompson, who has been taking her husband's duties as librarian since he went Overseas a year and a half ago has resigned her position much to the regret of the Board and is leaving town shortly. She will spend the summer at Wingham with her sister Mrs. Ollie Hayden, to be company for her while Mr. Hayden is absent on a business trip to the West. Later Mrs. Thompson expects to go to Toronto where her mother, Mrs. Forbes Clark and her brothers and sisters have been living since they left Walkerton last year. Mrs Thompson's departure will be regretted by her large circle of friends in town.

May Come Home.

Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Cryderman have had word that their son Surgeon Probationer Wilbur Cryderman of the British Navy, has been invalided to England with the probability of coming home to Canada. Wilbur has been acting as a ship's surgeon in the Mediterranean the past eight months. Prior to that, he served as a member of the University staff at Salonika for nearly two years. In the summer of 1916 he had a bad attack of cholera while on duty at Salonika and it is believed he has not yet recovered from the affects of his illness. A number of his Associates were recently sent home to complete their studies at the University Toronto.

South's Store-house Burned

The warehouse of the Saugeen Valley Mills caught fire Monday afternoon. The blaze was fanned by a stiff breeze and in about twenty minutes the building was in ashes. The warehouse is situated on the G. T. R. siding about a mile and a half south of the town and it is supposed to have caught fire from burning grass started from the locomotive of the afternoon train. Some pine boards which were standing against the building caught first and went up like match wood. Mr. South valued the building at about $1,000. Some machinery and scales were destroyed valued at $150 and also 3000 feet of rock elm and pine timber, which was stored in the building. Mr. J. W South, the proprietor, was in town when the fire started and before he could get to the scene the building had been reduced to cinders. About one-third of the loss was covered by insurance.

NOTICE

It is contrary to the By-laws of the Town of Walkerton to start fires of any kind at this time of year. Parties doing so will be prosecuted.

A. P. Johnston, Mayor.

His death occurred on March 28th, the day before Good Friday. Particulars have not been received here yet.

Latest Garden Gossip

It was reported down street yesterday morning and no doubt is as true as the war despatches from Berlin, that Mr Jim Cameron, King of Walkerton's retired farmers, and Major Henderson are going to utilize the extra daylight hour by growing dutch setts, and are looking for a good quarter of an acre. Any one having the same should consult their business agent J. O'Neil. Tommy Pye will hire the labor so the story goes and Albert will keep time with the stop watch. Big Jim's job will be to keep up the morale of his army of help as they work among the tear-producing vegetables by spinning yarns to them, a job at which he will require no assistance. With tears in both our right and left eyes as we think of what is ahead of them, we wish these gentlemen success.

Long Time In Family

By the resignation of Mrs. W. B. Thompson, the Public Librarianship, passes for the first time in over thirty years from the Thompson family. Her husband's grandfather, the late Andrew Thompson, who ran the old tannery took a great interest in books and for many years looked after the Library, which was at time known as the Mechanics Institute. When this sturdy old Scot died his son, the late William Thompson who was also something of a book-worm, took over the library, and he in turn was succeeded by his son W. B. who was librarian at the time the new building was erected and performed the duties faithfully and well, until the call came to him to go Overseas. From that time until now, the duties have been taken by his wife, who tendered her resignation to the Board last week.

The New Time

Walkerton started out bright and early Monday morning on the new time and is becoming more or less accustomed to the new order. It took the town a whole day to get into line. On Sunday half the clocks in town were out of step and as a result some folks went to church on old time and some on new time. In some of the churches a vote was taken as to what hour the services should be held this summer but in every case it was decided to follow the new order which means meeting an hour earlier than formerly. Opinion is very much divided as to the wisdom of changing the time but most people are saying little and waiting to see how the scheme will work out. One class of folks who don't care for the daylight saving scheme is the farmers. Most of them have put their clocks ahead, but they follow the old order throughout the day. "It would have suited us farmers better," one agriculturalist told the Telescope, "if the government had put the clocks back an hour instead of forward. It is often nine o'clock before the ground is fit to work on and five o'clock p. m. is the best time of the day for us." In town the gardens will no doubt profit by the extra hour. While there is no organized effort this year to bring vacant lots under cultivation, garden plots are in great demand and the local acreage will greatly exceed last

THE FARMERS' CLUB

Co-operative farmers' clubs are taking hold in rural communities of Bruce. The "clubs" idea seems to have been largely developed in the West. Apropos of the subject we reproduce the following short magazine item: "If you asked the folks who live around Oak Mound Man., if they find farming hard and farm life dull, they would laugh at you. That community has learned the secret of co-operative social life, with the school house—a modern, well-equipped brick building—as a community centre. The Oak Mound Farmers' Club is responsible for the building of the schoolhouse, and also for the continuous series of educational programmes presented there. They conduct an open forum for discussion of the problems vital to the vicinity; they invite competent speakers to come before them and discuss topics of the world-wide interest; their young people give plays, and they have a singing society with more than forty members which at intervals gives cantatas and concerts. Other co-operative ventures which have to do more with the business interests of the community are a farmers' telephone line and a farmers' elevator at Kraques, the nearest railroad station. The success of the Oak Mound community is mainly due to fact that all work together, everyone helps, from the pastor of the church who, by the way, organized the singing society, to the school children of the first grades. The result is a farming community which has most of the pleasures and none of the drawbacks of the city—and this, we believe, makes a state of existence which is very close to the ideal."

SIR WILFIRD LAURIER'S TITLE

(Ottawa Journal.)

"I accepted a title. Why I accepted it, holding the views I do hold, would be going into a matter of history."—Sir Wilfrid Laurier in the Commons yesterday.

What was this "matter of history" which, as Sir Wilfrid implied forced a title upon him against his will? Napoleon once said that all history was merely a lie agreed to and while the following version of the veteran Liberal chieftain came to be a Knight was not given to the writer at first hand, there is considerable reason to believe that it has much more of merit than the great Frenchman attributed to history in general. This, at all events is the version of how Sir Wilfrid got his title, and told to the writer by one who is in a position to know the truth:

After Sir Wilfrid attained the Premiership in the summers of 1896 it seemed to be the natural thing for the country to expect that he would be almost immediately given a title, and there was considerable surprise when, following the announcement of the 1897 New Year's honors, his name was not included. The explanation was that the honor had been offered, but that the Liberal leader respectfully but firmly declined it.

Six months later, however Sir Wilfrid (then plain Mr. Laurier) went to England to attend the jubilee of Queen Victoria. The reception accorded him by the British people was remarkable for its warmth. The handsome, distinguished young French Canadian statesman took London by storm, the press and public acclaiming his talents and Queen Victoria bestowing upon him particular attention and respect. One evening the Queen gave a dinner for the overseas Prime Ministers. When the young Canadian Premier, who was again honored by being seated next Her Majesty, took his seat at the banquet table, he found a card upon which Queen Victoria herself had written: "Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier." There was no way out of such a situation. The aged Queen had taken this means of honoring him, and Sir Wilfrid's chivalry and gallantry as well as his genuine affection for the great good monarch, triumphed over his democratic vows.

JOE RENNIE IN SCOTLAND

Visits the Heather-clad Hills of His Ancestors And Writes Chatty Impressions of Aberdeen And Incidents of his Trip

Pte Joe Rennie of the 160th Batt'n wrote the following interesting paragraphs to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Rennie, after having spent a week's leave in Scotland during which he visited Edinburgh, Glasgow and Aberdeen, the latter place being the old home of Mr. Rennie's parents before coming to Canada:—

Bramshott, March 23, 1918.

Dear Ones at Home,

Just got back from Scotland on Thursday and had a very good time. We left here a week ago Friday and had six full days of it. We went to London Friday night and caught a ten-thirty train from there, travelled all night and got into Edinburgh about 8.30 Saturday morning. We only had about an hour there so we didn't see much of the town. Then we caught a train for Perth and got there about noon and then we went to Aberdeen and got in there about two thirty Saturday afternoon. It is more like a Canadian city than any I have ever seen over here. On Sunday everything was closed but the kirks. We went to the kirk Sunday night but couldn't make out much of what the preacher was saying as he spoke so very broad. They sang nearly the same hymns as they use at home. You feel a great deal more at home up there than you do in any of the English cities or towns.

Aberdeen has the nicest beach I think I have ever seen although it would be much nicer to go up there in the summer time so as to enjoy the bathing. Going up we crossed the big bridge over the Firth of Forth. I think it is supposed to be the second largest bridge in the world and coming back we came over the Tay bridge. We could see the foundations of the old bridge that fell down about thirty-two years ago. An old Scotsman told us that there were a large number of people killed when it capsized. We saw some very fine horses when we were going up. The people were nearly all putting in their grain by hand. There were quite a number of women in the fields. The Scots seem to be great workers as we saw them working in the fields shortly after daylight.

A fellow by the name of Bell from Kincardine was up with me. I had my picture taken in the kilts when we were there and I will send you one when I get them. I guess it will be a funny looking outfit alright.

I had lots of fun talking to the people in Aberdeen. I like to hear them talk. We were talking to an old man in a store there one day for about an hour and he told us everything there was to know about Scotland. We stayed at a hotel there called the Aston, and it was a very good place to stay and cheap too. It only cost us four shillings and a half a day.

Sun lay night an old fellow stopped us and says, "Are ye gaen to the Kirk ye' me necht, laddies", so he showed us the church to go to and we had supper and then went to the kirk.

We stayed in Aberdeen all the time we were away, but would have liked to have seen Glasgow, but it would have taken too much time on the train. Tell Mr. Crawford that I saw lots of the Bonnie Heather. I guess I should send him my picture in the kilt if it is any good. The people up there seem to be much like the Canadians. Their ways are about the same. There are a bunch of kilties stationed there. They mostly all belong to the Gordons and they look dandy in their uniforms. I was talking to a man up there who has a son in the West and he says "he is making good money the now". When we were changing at Edinburgh the conductor came in, there were nearly all Canadians in the car so he says, "Winnipeg, change for Brandon, Calgary, Medicine Hat, Moosejaw, Edmonton and Vancouver, B. C.", and everybody had a good laugh over it. He was working on the C. P. R. in Canada before the war. He went to France and was wounded and is on the train in Scotland now. The people up there know more about Canada than the English people, at any rate they don't ask you such foolish questions. We have great fun with some of the English people. One man asked one of the boys if he lived near Eaton's. I guess he thought it was some big city or something. We have been having dandy weather and it is getting very hot in the day time. The time goes back an hour, they are bringing the daylight saving system into force again. So we will have to get up an hour earlier to-morrow morning.

We all got boxes from the Hearst Government the other day. It must have cost a lot to send them to us as they sent one to every Ontario soldier in England and France. I was over to see Harry Harcourt to-day and he expects to leave for Canada about Monday or Tuesday although he hopes something will turn up to keep him from going. He thinks people will talk because he hasn't been to France but believe me it wasn't his fault he didn't get going. He was up to London last week and saw Mel. Wilson, Jack Rowland and Harry Wettlaufer. Nearly all of our old officers left for France this morning. Bob Rowland and Vic. McKechnie went to the 44th Battalion and Captain Whitehead went to the 8th some time ago.

Joe.

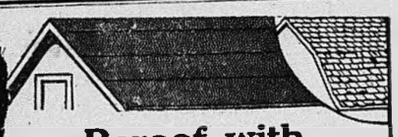
Who Is Speaking?

WHEN you answer the telephone by saying "Hello," a whole series of time-wasting questions must ensue!

¶ "Hello?" "Hello!" "Is that you Jack?" "Yes, who is that speaking?" "This is Bill!" "Oh, hello Bill"—and so it goes.

¶ Why not answer at once by saying "Mr. Watson speaking," or "Mr. Watson of Smith & Co. speaking."



¶ Save time by answering at once with your name. Don't say 'Hello.'

HOG PRODUCTION

It is a matter of the greatest importance that Canada should increase her production of BACON HOGS and other live stock as there is at present a world-wide shortage of meat. Good markets for some time to come are assured.

THE CANADIAN BANK OF COMMERCE will gladly make loans to assist farmers in good standing to acquire live stock. 301

Reroof with Brantford Asphalt Roofing

Don't let a leaky roof damage the wall paper, carpets or furniture in your home, the crops in your barn or the goods in your store. Tear off the old shingles or other worn out roofing material and put on a lasting roof of Brantford Asphalt Roofing.

This roofing is made of a blend of hard and soft asphalts on a long-fibred felt base. By blending the asphalts a roofing of remarkable elasticity is secured—one that is flexible, durable and capable of resisting all kinds of severe climatic extremes.

Brantford Asphalt Roofing is, in addition, surfaced with silicia sand on both sides, which adds to its weight, fire-resistance and durability. You may be offered other sanded roofing, but it will not have the quality of material or weight of saturation of Brantford Asphalt Roofing.

Made in three weights:—60 lb., 70 lb., 80 lb. per square.

Brantford Rubber Roofing

is the same quality as Brantford Asphalt, but has a smooth, rubbery surface instead of the sand. It is particularly suitable for verandah decks and floor coverings. Three weights:—40 lb., 50 lb., and 60 lb. per square.

Standard Mohawk Roofing

consists of the same grade of materials as Brantford Asphalt Roofing but is lighter in weight—a thoroughly reliable roofing at a low price. Tested for years and has given entire satisfaction. Sanded on one side. One weight:—40 lbs. per square.

Mohawk Rubber Roofing

The same quality as Standard Mohawk but with a smooth surface. Used for all classes of temporary work—sheds, bunk-houses, camp sites, even dugouts in the trenches. 35 lb., 45 lb., and 55 lb. weights.

Leatheroid Roofing

Slightly lower quality than Mohawk Rubber. Used for same purposes. 35 lb., 45 lb., and 55 lb. weights.

Samples of any of these roofings and prices will be furnished by either the makers or their agents in this locality.

Pigs is Pigs!

There was considerable noise around the Rathbury House stables on Saturday morning last when the distribution of pigs was made to the members of The Molsons Bank Pig Club. The Bank is selling the pigs to the children at cost and will buy them back about October 1st, at the market price or better. Prizes also will be given for best results, and to encourage the children to increase production. Another distribution will be made next Saturday.—Clinton New Era.

A Sudden Call

Mr. Joseph Dosman, an old and highly respected pioneer of Culross was called away very suddenly at his home in Mildmay early Thursday morning April 11th. Mr. Dosman who had been enjoying his accustomed health had just returned from the homestead in Culross where he had been helping his son Harry in the sugar bush and went to bed at the usual hour. Shortly after midnight his wife, who had just come in from attending a sick woman, noticed that he was breathing heavily and tried to rouse him. In a few moments life fluttered away. Heart trouble, with which he had suffered more or less the past two years, was the cause of his demise. Mr. Dosman who was about 76 years of age, had spent nearly all his life in Culross. He is an industrious and intelligent farmer, a good neighbor and was respected for his high principles. Two years ago he retired to the village of Mildmay. His loss is deeply mourned by a widow, three sons and four daughters. Harry resides on the homestead in Culross. Isabella and Melinda are at home, the others living in Western Canada. A large concourse of friends and relatives attended the funeral at Formosa on Monday morning, which was conducted by Rev. Fr. Brohman.

The Tractor

The Tractor on the farm arose.
Before the dawn at four;
It drove the cows and washed the clothes,
And finished every chore;
Then forth it went into the fields,
Just at the break of day—
It reaped and threshed the golden yield
And hauled it all away.
It ploughed the field that afternoon
And when the job was through
It hummed a pleasant little tune,
And churned the butter, too:
Then pumped the water for the stock
And ground a crib of corn,
And hauled the baby round the block
To still its cries forlorn.
Thus ran the busy hours away
By many a labor-let,
And yet when fell the twilight grey
The tractor had no rest;
For while the farmer peaceful-eyed,
Read by the tungsten's glow,
The patient tractor stood outside
And ran the dynamo.

Aunt Sally's Letter

To the Readers of The Walkerton Telescope

Dear Friends,—

Our attention is drawn to the Children's Aid Society of Bruce County by the arrival of Mr. Elliott who has had considerable experience in Children's Aid work at Ottawa. I have had a chat with him regarding the work and he told me some interesting things that I thought you would be interested in too. The duties of the Society are:—

(1) The protection of children from neglect and cruelty.

(2) The placing of homeless or dependent children in foster homes.

(3) General child welfare and educational work.

Now I wasn't quite sure just what was meant by "neglect." So he showed me a little book called Handbook on Children's Protection Act. Here is a complete definition of what a neglected child is.

"Neglected Child" shall mean a child who is found begging, receiving alms, thieving in a public place, sleeping at night in the open air, loitering about in a public place after nine o'clock in the evening, associating or dwelling with a thief, drunkard or vagrant or is a habitual truant, or a child who by reason of the n glect, drunkenness or other vice of its parents is growing up without salutary parental control and education, or in circumstances exposing such child to an idle and dissolute life; or who is found in a house of ill-fame, or known to associate with or be in the company of reputed prostitute; or an orphan, or an illegitimate child whose mother is unable to maintain it; or who is deserted by its parents; or where only parent is undergoing imprisonment for crime; or who by reason of ill-treatment, continual personal injury or grave misconduct or habitual intemperance of its parents or either of them is in peril of loss of life, health or morality; or whose home by reason of neglect, cruelty or depravity is an unfit place for such child."

I didn't expect that "neglect" could mean so much and it is well worth knowing.

"Now what can we do to help along the good work?" I asked Mr. Elliott. He said there were four ways to help and these were:—

By becoming a member.
Reporting neglected children.
Adopting a friendless child.
Helping the cause financially.

We are proud of the Bruce Old Girls and Boys and I am sure we will all help the Children's Aid Society to give every little Bruce girl and boy a good start in life.

Faithfully yours,
Aunt Sally

PRESENTS FOR SENATORS' WIVES

The next time we are over at Pinkerton, writes Editor Wm. McDonald of the Chesley Enterprise, we will call at Senator Donnelly's to ask him let us see the handbag and purse he got for his better half at the country's expense. This is how Toronto Saturday Night shows up a pillage in the Senate in bread daylight:—"Evidence is at hand of the active entrance of women into the political arena. Members of the Canadian Senate have purchased, at Government expense, of course, one hundred ladies' handbags at $8 each, and forty ladies' purses at $5.50 each. Auditor-General Fraser, who voiced a protest before Parliament in respect to spending Government money in this manner, does not inform us on whom these new gew gaws were bestowed. We have before now heard of buying a colored gentleman's vote with a ham, but a woman's support purchased with an $8 handbag or a $5.50 purse is a new note in politics. As Government waste goes at Ottawa, this is, of course, a mere flea bite, but when our staid old Senators slide down the hill of virtue to the extent of grafting fairy trifles for their sisters, their cousins and their aunts, and then have the nerve to declaim on public platforms on the necessity of more production, plainer living, cutting out the luxuries, and all that sort of thing, it inclines the average citizen to get hot under the collar. And, by the way, who got these bags and purses? The Senate contains roughly ninety members, so there are sufficient eight-dollar handbags to go around one to the family, with the goodly margin of ten over. Add the forty purses, and it would seem that the Hon. Senators' female relations are fairly well taken care of."

EDEN GROVE

The Red Cross dance at Eden Grove went off with a bang last Friday. Everybody there was presented with a rip-roaring hullabaloo of a musical frolic. The spirit of Mr. Jiggs permeated every foot in the hall, even into the staid euchre players upon the platform whose feet would sometimes be keeping time to the music whilst they trumped their partner's ace.

Old men, young men, and imps. Fat men, lean men, and those that weren't yet men at all. Tall men, short men and babies. Lovely girls, lovey girls, fair girls, dark girls and girls that weren't yet girls at all. Slim girls and plump girls all wiggled their toes to the entrancing music played by the Hetsler Bros. The proceeds to the Red Cross amounted to about fifteen dollars.

Angus Blue is still farming.

A great and disastrous fire broke out in the late Cassidy residence about nine o'clock Sunday evening entirely destroying the magnificent edifice. The loss of life was extremely high, none of the stock being rescued. All our staff are working to secure a valuation of the amount destroyed but of course any estimate as yet can only be a matter of guesswork as the number of animals destroyed is estimated at no less than a million and a half.

Herb Pearson sold his horse to J. Tolchard last Saturday for $125.

Account of the change in time I set off to bed too early last Sunday night and in consequence had a most horrible nightmare. I thought I had done something wrong and the citizens had organized themselves into a vigilance committee. They were after me. Nearer and nearer drew their cries I could distinguish Dick Desmond's voice above all the rest. With gasping breath and legs almost giving out, I stumbled up the railway track where O'Reilly's and Seller's cows were pasturing as usual. Hard at my heels ran John Seller till someone off to the right yelled "Halt 'im" "Halt 'im." Poor John thought he said halter and ran toward the voice hoping to make a sale. Next Pat Desmond and Mike made a grab for me but in desperation I paused and whispered "I got ten minutes" and they both promptly squatted down and started to shuffle a greasy deck while I made my getaway. Then John Killen made a jump for me (ever see John jump) but had to call it off because he had run out of chewing tobacco and didn't have his crate of it with him. Tom Desmond grabbed my arm but I waved an old envelope in his face and shouted "Pledge" when he (being at the present time in a most contrite spirit) stopped short to sign it. Then Mac Scott made a running dive for my undergins but someone yelled "Charge" and he hesitated and commenced searching in every one of his pockets for a pencil. Finally only young Dick and Ed. Bailey were left to carry on the chase and they both fell asleep. I was awakened, wet with fear, by the sound of their snores. (It must have been their's because my wife swears she don't do that sort of thing).

Just on the threshold of young womanhood, Miss Violet Pearl Hilliard of Hanover passed away at the Kitchener hospital on April 7th, at the early age of 22 years. An abscess formed in her ear about three weeks ago which turned to blood poisoning causing her death.

Mr. A. Derby of Hanover, cattle-buyer, met with a thrilling experience one week in the flood at Mr. James Gilliveray's gate. He drove along not thinking that it was very deep decided to drive through but the current was too swift. It swept the horse off its feet and it went under but Mr. Derby managed to keep his head and shoulders above, scrambled to the horse, got him up and unhitched and got out safely, but lost his hat, blanket, robe and rubbers. He stayed at Mr. James McGillivray's over night where he soon got dry clothes. He left next morning feeling as good as ever.—Durham Chronicle.

NARVA

The delightful spring with which the weather-man has favoured this burg is being appreciated by all. Owing to the continuous dry and warm spell the land is being rapidly brought to a good condition for the spring work. Sowing has already begun by some of the farmers.

In accordance with the new "Daylight Saving Act" as passed by the Federal Government at Ottawa recently, the people in this locality have moved their timepieces ahead one hour and are now working under the new principle. This act undoubtedly will be followed by great prosperity to our Dominion. The two new cars which have been recently landed in Narva is a sure sign of prosperity but for this we cannot credit the new Act as they were purchased previous to its being passed. As prosperity increases so also will the number of cars increase Therefore it is evident that the Day light Saving Act will be the instrument in the bringing into Narva of a great but as yet indefinite number of cars. To improve accommodation it will be found a doubt be necessary to widen the business streets at least, but don't let us meet trouble half-way.

Mr. Will Keyes has purchased a Ford car. Billy is the man for a car alright as he seems to have mastered the art of running it already.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Moffat Sundayed at Dave Watson's, at Paisley, Mrs. Watson being very ill.

Mrs. Foreman Sr. continues to be poorly, although the latest reports state improvement.

Mr. J. Keyes has been experimenting on his new car a few times. Of course it could not be obedient under the guidance of such a capable chauffeur as John.

Mr. Geo Chick of Pinkerton has been engaged at Mr. John Bell's for the past week or so.

With great anticipation are we all at time of writing, looking ahead to the Mystic Tea to be held in Pinkerton on Monday night. And there is not the slightest possibility but what our anticipations will be realized when the event takes place. At any rate we hope not.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Moffat, and Misses Irene and Alexia motored to Durham on Tuesday last to attend the funeral of Mrs. Moffat's Aunt, Miss Kelly.

(Intended for last week)

We, the citizens of Narva, thank the neighboring scribes for their kindness in including in their crowded news columns a few items about Navra. But Narva is Nara, and though hemmed in on either side by the thriving towns of Glamis and Pinkerton, it is a suburb of neither. Therefore, why cannot the folks in our town make things lively so that Narva's news column can take its stand beside that of any other burg.

Syrup-making has proved to be an unusually successfull industry around the corner but it is now giving way to the other spring work of ploughing etc.

Mrs. Foreman Sr., we learn, has been seriously ill. We trust that she will soon regain her former strength.

PINKERTON

At the regular meeting of the Red Cross the following motion of sympathy was passed:

That we, the members of the Pinkerton Red Cross extend our most sincere sympathy to Mrs. Pinkerton in her sad bereavement.

In Mr. Pinkerton's death, the whole community has sustained a real loss. He took an interest in many circles and in each was sincere, always willing to help others without regard for himself. When the Red Cross Society found a real friend, always ready to help us in any possible way. But the loss to the community is slight with that of Mrs. Pinkerton and her family. They have lost a kind and loving husband and father.

This motion is quite inadequate to express our sentiments but we hope that it will in a slight degree express to Mrs. Pinkerton our deep feeling of sympathy.

The Mystic Tea which was held in the C.O.F. Hall on Monday night, and under the auspices of the Red Cross proved a decided success in every way. A very dainty lunch was served at the twelve tables and a large crowd was present. After the lunch, a programme of musical selections and speeches were given and a feature of the evening was the presentation by the Greenock Council of a $10.00 gold piece to Pte. A very pleasant evening was spent at the home of Mrs. McIntosh and son Mr. David McIntosh near Glamis on April 11th. when a few of their friends and neighbors gathered to spend a social evening and make the following presentation and address. The Chair was very fittly occupied by the Rev. Mr. Reith of Glamis. The address was read by Mrs. Reith, the presentation made by Mrs. Wright and Miss Elsie Webb. After Mrs. McIntosh thanked all very kindly, the evening was spent in speeches and good Scotch music, both vocal and instrumental. A dainty luncheon was served by the ladies. After which all joined heartily in singing Auld Lang Signe, when each departed to their respective homes, hoping yet to spend many social evenings at Mrs. McIntosh's home.

To Mrs. McIntosh
and Mr. David McIntosh

Dear Friends,

We, a few of your friends and neighbors, feeling that a fitting opportunity had had presented itself, have met to express our kind regards for you both and our sincere appreciation of the neighborly spirit you have lived and labored upon this farm.

The announcement that you were having a sale of your stock and implements was interpreted in some quarters as meaning but one thing, namely, that you were about to move from our neighborhood. We are glad that we have reason to believe that this is not the case. But the knowledge that you were giving up farming operations in our midst, and the supposition that you might be leaving us, has brought forcibly to our minds, the large place you held in our affections and the magnitude of the loss we would sustain if you were to go away.

We think to-night of the years as they have passed with sunshine and shadow their joys and their sorrows. You have rejoiced with us, and our hearts go out in gratitude to you for all your help and sympathy expressed in so many ways. And now since you will be relieved of the more arduous duties, we hope and pray that you both may be spared in health and strength to enjoy for many years the result of your labours, and find much joy and happiness in the fellowship of your friends. As a slight token of our affectionate regard and good wishes for you, we ask you Mrs. McIntosh to accept this shawl, bedroom slippers, and purse, and ask you Mr. David McIntosh to accept this Bible, tie and pin and box of stationery.

Signed on behalf of your friends and neighbors.

Mrs. Robert Wright,
Mrs. George Webb

impression was the finest and sweetest understood. They won't hurt her at all, Willie."

This deliberate misinterpretation of his motives made it difficult for William to speak. "Do you think," he began hoarsely, "do you think"—

"They're so small too," Mrs. Baxter went on. "She probably wouldn't be sick if she ate them all."

"My heavens!" he burst forth. "Do you think I was worrying about"— He broke off, unable to express himself save by a few gestures of despair. Again finding his voice, and a great deal of it, he demanded: "Do you realize that Miss Pratt will be here within less than half an hour? What do you suppose she'd think of the people of this town if she was invited out expecting decent treatment and found two-thirds of the cakes eaten up before she got there and what was left of 'em all pawed over and chewed up lookin' from some wretched child?"

"Now, Willie," said Mrs. Baxter gently, "you'd better go up and brush your hair again before your friends come. You mustn't let yourself get so excited."

"Excited!" he cried incredulously. "Do you think I'm excited? Ye gods!" He smote his hands together and in his despair of her intelligence would have flung himself down upon a chair, but was arrested halfway by simultaneous loud outcries from his mother and Jane.

"Don't sit on the CAKES!" they both screamed.

Saving himself and the pan of wafers by a supreme contortion at the last instant, William decided to remain upon his feet. "What do I care for the cakes?" he demanded contemptuously, beginning to pace the floor. "It's the question of principle I'm talking about! Do you think it's right to give the people of this town a poor name when strangers like Miss Pratt come to visit—"

"Don't sit on the CAKES!"

"Willie!" His mother looked at him hopelessly. "Do go and brush your hair. If you could see how you've mussed it you would."

He strode from the room.

Jane looked after him placidly. "Didn't he talk funny?" she murmured.

"Yes, dear," said Mrs. Baxter. She shook her head and uttered the enigmatic words, "They do."

"I mean Willie, mamma," said Jane. "If it's anything about Miss Pratt he always talks awful funny. Don't you think Willie talks awful funny if it's anything about Miss Pratt, mamma?"

"Yes, but"—

"What, mamma?" Jane asked as her mother paused.

"Well, it happens. People do get like that at his age, Jane."

"Does everybody?"

"No, I suppose not everybody; just some."

William returned violently to the doorway, his hair still tousled, and, standing upon the threshold, said sternly:

"What is that child wearing her best dress for?"

"To please you. Don't you want her to look her best at your tea?"

"I thought that was it!" he cried, and upon this confirmation of his worst fears he did increased violence to his rumpled hair. "I suspected it, but I wouldn't 'a' believed it! You mean to let this child—you mean to let"— Here his agitation affected his throat and his utterance became clouded. A few detached phrases fell from him: "Invite my friends—children's party—ye gods!—think Miss Pratt plays dolls"—

"Jane will be very good," his mother said. "I shouldn't think of not having her, Willie, and you needn't bother about your friends. They'll be very glad to see her. They all know her except Miss Pratt, perhaps, and—"

Mrs. Baxter paused; then she noted suddenly, "By the way, haven't I seen somewhere that she likes pretending to be a little girl herself?"

"What!"

"Yes," said Mrs. Baxter, remaining calm, "I'm sure I've heard somewhere that she likes to talk baby talk."

Upon this a tremor passed over William, after which he became rigid. "You ask a lady to your house," he began, "and even before she gets home before you've even seen her, you pass judgment upon one of the—one of the noblest"—

Mrs. Baxter laughed, and then, probably a little out of patience with him, she gave way to that innate mischievousness in such affairs which is not unknown to her sex. "You see, Willie, if Miss Pratt pretends to be a cunning little girl it will be helpful to Jane to listen and learn how."

William uttered a cry. He knew that he was struck, but he was not sure, now or where. Again he dashed from the room. Near the open front door he came to a sudden halt, and Mrs. Baxter and Jane heard him calling loudly to the industrious Genesis: "Here! You go cut the grass in the back yard and, for heaven's sake, take that dog with you!"

"Grass awready cut roun' back," responded the amiable voice of Genesis. "Cut all 'at back yo'd 'a mawnin'."

"Well, you can't cut the front yard now. Go around in the back yard with that dog."

"Nemmine 'bout 'at back yo'd: Ole Clem ain' trouble nobody!"

"You hear me?" William shouted. "You do what I say at once!"

Genesis laughed gayly. "I got my grass to cut. Who pay me my wages? 'At's my boss. You' ma say, you git all 'at lawn mowed b'fo' sundown.' No, suh! Nee'n' was's you' bref on me, 'cause I'm gut all my time good an' took up."

Once more William presented himself tatefully to his mother and Jane. "May I just kindly ask you to look out in the front yard? I want you to look at Genesis."

"I'm familiar with his appearance," said Mrs. Baxter. "Why in the world do you mind his cutting the grass?"

William groaned. "Do you honestly want guests coming to this house to see that awful old darky out there and know that he's the kind of servants we employ? Ye gods!"

"Why, Genesis is just a neighborhood outdoor darky, Willie. He works for half a dozen families besides us."

"Yes," he cried, "but a lady that didn't live here wouldn't know that! Ye gods! What do you suppose she would think? You know what he's got on?"

"It's a sort of sleeveless jersey he wears, Willie, I think."

"No, you don't think that!" he cried, with great bitterness. "You know it's not a jersey! You know perfectly well what it is, and yet you expect to keep him out there when—when one of the—one of the noble—when my friends arrive! And they'll think that's our dog out there, won't they? When intelligent people come to a house and see a dog sidling out in front they think it's the family in the house's dog, don't they?"

William paced the room. "Ye gods! What do you think Miss Pratt will think of the people of this town when she's invited to meet a few of my friends and the first thing she sees is a nigger in his undershirt? What'll she think when she finds that child's eaten up half the food, and the people have to explain that the dog in the front yard belongs to the darky?

"And prob'ly she wouldn't believe it. Anybody'd say they didn't own a dog like that! And that's what you want her to see before she even gets inside the house! Instead of a regular gardener in livery like we ought to have and a bulldog or a good Airedale or a foxhound or something, the first things you want intelligent people from out of town to see are that awful old darky and his mongrel scratchin' fleas and like as not lettin' 'em get on other people!"

"Willie!"

Mrs. Baxter managed to obtain his attention. "If you'll go and brush your hair I'll send Genesis and Clematis away for the rest of the afternoon. And then if you'll sit down quietly I'll"—

"Quietly!" he echoed. "I'm the only one that is quiet around here!"

"There, there," she said soothingly. "Go and brush your hair, and change your collar, Willie. It's all wilted. I'll send Genesis away."

"Collar," he muttered.

"Change it!" said Mrs. Baxter, raising her voice. "It's wilted!"

He departed in a dazed manner.

Passing through the hall, he paused abruptly, his eye having fallen with a sudden disapproval upon a large, heavily framed, glass covered engraving, "The Battle of Gettysburg," which hung upon the wall near the front door. Undeniably it was a picture feeble in decorative quality. No doubt, too, William was right in thinking it an unworthy of Miss Pratt, as were Jane and Genesis and Clematis. He felt that she must never see it, especially as the frame had been chipped and had a corner broken, but it was more pleasantly effective where he found it than where in his nervousness he left it. A few hasty jerks snapped the elderly green cords by which it was suspended; then he laid the picture upon the floor and with his handkerchief made a curious labyrinth of avenues in the large oblong area of fine dust which this removal disclosed upon the wall.

Pausing to wipe his hot brow with the same implement, he remembered that some one had made allusions to his collar and hair, whereupon he sprang to the stairs, mounted two at a time, rushed into his own room and confronted his streaked image in the mirror.

CHAPTER VIII.

At Home to His Friends.

AFTER ablutions William found his wet hair plastic and easily obtained the long, even sweep backward from the brow, lacking which no male person, unless bald, fulfilled his definition of a man of the world. But there ensued a period of vehemence and activity caused by a bent collar button. The day was warm, and moisture bedewed him afresh. Belated victory no sooner arrived than he perceived a fatal dimpling of the new collar and was forced to exchange it for a successor.

Voices from below, making polite laughter, warned him that already some of the hidden party had arrived, and as he completed the fastening of his third consecutive collar an ecstasy of sound reached him through the open window—and then, oh, then he began to tremble. It was the voice of Miss Pratt, no less!

He stopped for one heartstruck look from his casement. All in fluffy white and heliotrope she was, a blond rapture floating over the sidewalk toward William's front gate. Her little white cottony dog, with a heliotrope ribbon round his neck, bobbed his head over her enfolding arm. A heliotrope parasol shielded her infinitesimally from the amorous sun. Poor William!

Two youths entirely in William's condition of heart accompanied the glamorous girl, while Miss Parcher appeared dimly upon the outskirts of the group, the well known penalty for hostesses who entertain such radiance. Probably it serves them right. Miss Pratt's voice came clearly as the chiming of tiny bells, for she spoke whimsically to her little dog in that tinkling childlike fashion which was part of the spell she cast.

"Darlin' Flopit," she said, "wake up! Oo tummin' to tea potty wis all de frowed ups. I'ceitus Flopit, wake up!"

His heart melting within him, William turned from the angelic sounds of the window. He ran out of the room and plunged down the front stairs. And the next moment the crash of breaking glass and the loud thump-bump of a heavily falling human body resounded.

Mrs. Baxter, alarmed, excused herself from the tea table, round which were gathered four or five young people, and hastened to the front hall, followed by Jane. Through the open door were seen Miss Pratt, Miss Parcher, Mr. Johnnie Watson and Mr. Joe Bullitt coming up the walk, laughing and unaware of the catastrophe which had occurred. And a little distance from the foot of the stairs William was seated upon the prostrate "Battle of Gettysburg."

"I slid," he said hoarsely. "I carried it upstairs with me"—he believed this—"and somebody brought it down and left it lying flat on the floor by the bottom step on purpose to trip me. I stepped on it, and it slid."

"Get up, Willie," Mrs. Baxter urged, and then she beheld ruins other than the wrecked engraving. She stifled a cry. "Willie, did the glass cut you?"

He felt himself. "No'm."

"It did your trousers. You'll have to change them. Hurry!"

Some of William's normal faculties were restored to him by one hasty glance at the back of his left leg, which had a dismantled appearance. A long blue strip of cloth hung there, with white showing underneath.

"Hurry!" said Mrs. Baxter. And, hastily gathering some fragments of glass, she dropped them upon the engraving, pushed it out of the way and went forward to greet Miss Pratt and her attendants.

Upward William sped unseen and came to a breathless halt at the top of the stairs.

As it were in a dream he heard his mother's hospitable greetings at the door, and the little party lingered in the hall, detained by Miss Pratt's discovery of Jane.

"Oh, tweetums toetums ickle dirl!" he heard the ravishing voice exclaim. "Oh, toetums ickle blue sash!"

"It cost a dollar and eighty-nine cents," said Jane. "Willie sat on the cakes."

"Oh, no, he didn't!" Mrs. Baxter laughed. "He didn't quite!"

"He had to go upstairs," said Jane. And as the stricken listener above smote his forehead she added placidly, "He tore a hole in his clothes."

She seemed about to furnish details, her mood being communicative, but Mrs. Baxter led the way into the "living room." The lull was vacated, and only the murmur of voices and laughter reached William.

William leaned upon the banister railing and thought thoughts about Jane. For several long, seething moments he thought of her exclusively. Then, spurred by the loud laughter of rivals and the agony of knowing that even in his own house they were monopolizing the attention of one of the noblest, he hastened into his own room and took account of his reverses.

Standing with his back to the mirror, he obtained over his shoulder a view of his trousers which caused him to break out in a fresh perspiration. Again he wiped his forehead with the handkerchief, and the result was instantly visible in the mirror.

William began a feverish examination of the garments hanging in a clothes closet. There were two pairs of flannel trousers which would probably again be white and possible when sponged and pressed. Beside them hung his last year's summer suit of light gray.

Feverishly he brought it forth, threw off his coat and then, deflected by another glance at the mirror, began to change his collar again. To quicken the process he decided to straighten the bent collar button. Using a shoehorn as a lever, he succeeded in bringing the little cap or head of the button into its proper place, but his final effort dislodged the cap from the rod between it and the base, and it flew off into space.

Here was a calamity. Few things are more useless than a decapitated collar button, and William had no other. He had made sure that it was his last before he put it on that day; also he had ascertained that there was none in, on or about his father's dressing table. Finally, in the possession of neither William nor his father was there a shirt with an indigenous collar.

At first he did not realize the extent of his misfortune. Of course William searched his dressing table and his father's, although he had been thoroughly over both once before that day. Next he went through most of his mother's and Jane's accessories to the toilet, through trinket boxes, glove boxes, hairpin boxes, handkerchief cases, even through sewing baskets. Utterly he convinced himself that ladies not only use no collar buttons, but also never pick them up and put them among their own belongings. Jane, arriving at his locked door upon an errand, was bidden by a thick, unnatural voice to depart.

"Mamma says, 'What in mercy's name is the matter?'" Jane called. "She whispered to me, 'Go an' see what in mercy's name is the matter with Willie, an' if the glass cut him, after all, an' why don't he come down.' An' why don't you, Willie? We're all havin' the nicest time!"

"You g'way!" said the strange voice within the room. "G'way!"

"Well, did the glass cut you?"

"No! Keep quiet. G'way!"

"Well, are you ever comin' down to your party?"

"Yes, I am. G'way!"

Jane obeyed, and William somehow completed the task upon which he was engaged. Genius had burst forth from his despair. Necessity had become a mother again, and William's collar was in place. It was tied there. Under his necktie was a piece of string.

He had lost count of time, but he was frantically aware of its passage. Agony was in the thought of so many rich moments frittered away upstairs while Joe Bullitt and Johnnie Watson made hay below. And there was another spur to haste in his fear that the behavior of Mrs. Baxter might not be all that the guest of honor would naturally expect of William's mother. As for Jane, his mind filled with dread. Shivers passed over him at intervals.

It was a dismal thing to appear at a party, and that his own, in last summer's suit, but when he had hastily put it on and faced the mirror he felt a little better—for three or four seconds. Then he turned to see how the back of it looked—and collapsed in a chair, moaning.

He had worn these clothes on the previous Saturday, and, returning from a glorified walk with Miss Pratt, he had demonstrated a fact to which his near demolition of the wafers this afternoon was additional testimony. This fact, roughly stated, is that a person of seventeen in love is liable to sit down anywhere. William had dreamily seated himself upon a taboret in the library without noticing that Jane had left her open paint box there. Jane had just been painting sunsets. Naturally all the little blocks of color were wet, and the effect upon William's pale gray trousers was marvelous, far beyond the capacity of his cost to conceal.

Collar buttons and children's paint boxes—these are the trolls that lie in wait!

The gray clothes and the flannel trousers had been destined for the professional cleaner, and William, rousing himself from a brief stupor, made a piteous effort to substitute himself

Beginning June 1, the banking hours in Canada will probably be made 9.30 to 2.30 instead of 10 to 3 o'clock as at present, the proposed change being based on the shortage of man power in the banks and the necessity of doing something to facilitate the clearing up of the day's routine. However, an amendment to the Bank Act will be necessary before the change can be made, as the Act fixes the hours at which the banks must remain open for the public convenience.

A Sheep Instead Of Dog

In many parts of Canada there are hundreds of useless dogs which not only necessitate a waste of food, but are deterrent to the keeping of sheep. It has been estimated that the food consumed by these dogs is worth about $34. per dog per year. The food consumed by six dogs would be enough to feed one Belgian orphan. A sheep can be purchased for the cost of a dog. It is just as good a pet and in addition will yield $6. worth of wool yearly, and $10 worth of meat when killed, as against a merely nominal killing value on dogs in case their hides are turned into gloves. The replacement of dogs with sheep would prevent wastage of a large amount of food, and would add greatly to the food supply.

Necessary Farm Equipment

MORE and more the Ford car is looked upon by progressive farmers as necessary farm equipment, the same as the plow, the hay-rake, the drill, the mower, the harrow and other labor and time-saving machinery.

A farmer with a Ford car can dispense with one or two of his horses and make the trips to town, railway station, creamery, or to the neighbours in one-third the time. In fact there is no farm machine made that will save the busy farmer and his busy wife so much valuable time as a Ford. And it's so easy to take care of—far easier than a horse. No bed to make, or hay and oats to get, no harnessing and unharnessing, and no stables to clean. The Ford practically takes care of itself.

Ask any farmer who owns a Ford if he would ever again try to get along without it. His answer will hasten your decision to own one.

Shocking.

An elderly lady of very prim and severe aspect was seated next a young couple who were discussing the merits of their motor-cars.

"What color is your body?" asked the young man of the girl at his side, meaning of course the body of her motor.

"Oh, mine is pink. What is yours?"

"Mine," replied the man, is brown with wide yellow stripes."

This was too much for the old lady. Rising from the table, she exclaimed: "When young people come to talking each other the color of their bodies at a dinner-party, it is time I left the room."

"I WAS RAISED ON A FARM."

(W. L. S. in Weekly Sun.)

Why is it that so many men, not now engaged in farming, when given audience begin by saying, "I was raised on a farm?"

There is no compliment to the audience in such a statement, nor is there in it evidence of ordinary horse sense on the part of the speaker. The statement means either one of two things—that the speaker was too great a dub to succeed at farming or else that he abandoned the farm for a job by which he thought he could make an easier living. Where the former is the case a man has no business to inflict what he is pleased to call his ideas on any one; where the latter holds true an impertinence is shown in the assumption that the man on the platform proposes to speak down to the level of intelligence of those who cannot hope to reach his lofty mental stature.

For my part, whenever I hear a man begin with "I was raised on a farm," I feel an almost overpowering desire to reach for the nearest brick-bat or pitch-fork.

Played At Kincardine.

The "Elgin Comes To Stay" company of Walkerton players put on their production at Kincardine last Friday night to a crowded house. The audience was most appreciative. After the show the members were invited to the home of Mr. J. J. Hunter publisher of the Kincardine Reporter, where supper was served before starting on their long homeward drive. Mr. Mc-Barney and his company can't say too much for the hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. Hunter and the many kindnesses shown by the good people of Kincardine. The Company has now completed its "barnstorming" and certainly deserves credit for its efforts in a good cause. Above all expenses, they have raised for the Bruce County Hospital over $300 and for the Red Cross in the three towns they have played in over $200.

Among those present from a distance were:— Mrs. A. H. Dowling of Young, Sask.; Mrs. W. G. Steele, Calgary; Mr. and Mrs. David Vogan and Mr. and Mrs. David Hicks of Gorrie; Mr. Robert Vogan of Toronto, and Miss M. Plewes of Oakville.

A Red Cross Calf

A calf with a Red Cross on its side, the rest of the animal being nearly all white, was recently born in the herd of Mr. Richard Garland, an old Bruce boy, now of Medicine Hat. Mr. Garland generously turned it over to the Red Cross and the Red Cross calf is now earning money for patriotic purposes. Particulars were received here through a letter written by Mrs. Garland to her sister, Mrs. Thos. E. Williams of Katrime, Man. she stating that the calf, which was donated to a local Red Cross Society, was put on exhibition in a tent for one day and raised $50 for the Red Cross. The fund orders to send him to Great Falls and St. Paul and it is likely that the Red Cross calf will likely be all over the country on its worthy errand.

George Rife Dead.

Walkerton friends learned with regret of the death at Long Beach, California, on June 3rd., of George Rife, a former well known resident of this town. Mr. Rife was a tailor and sewing machine business here for many years, being for sometime in partnership with his brother, Mr. S. A. Rife. He was an enthusiastic bandsman and led the 32nd Batt'n Band when it organization was in its prime. Fourteen years ago Mr. Rife removed to Brandon, Man. where he has since resided. He had been ill quite a few years and at the beginning of last Winter the family went to California in the hope of benefiting his health. At first he seemed to be getting better, but about two months ago he took a turn for the worse and became very weak, passing away on Monday. The late Mr. Rife leaves to mourn his loss, his wife and daughter, Miss Marjorie, who were with him in California, his elder daughter, Mrs. Stanley Jackson of Winnipeg and several brothers and sisters. The funeral took place at Long Beach, California, on June 5th.

In fact, has one son in France and another about to leave for Overseas. He has leased both stores of Miss Bruce's block and will enlarge the photo studio. County Court Sitting

The June Session is on at the Court House this week. Judge Klein on the bench Four Civil Cases are on the docket. In the case of Chris. Hetherington of Culross against Ezra Sitler regarding the purchase of a horse which afterwards died, a great many witnesses were heard. Judgment was given in favor of Sitler, who was represented by O. E. Klein, Barrister Clark of Mt. Forest, appearing for the plaintiff. At time of going to press the case of McPhail vs. Nichols were on. This is an action brought by Laughlin McPhail, a farmer of Bruce Tp. to recover the value of seven head of cattle alleged to have been poisoned by some substance purchased as epsom salts from the defendant, John S. Nichols, a merchant of Paisley. Schnurr vs. Dossman, both of Carrick, in an action which arose over a dispute in the purchase of a cow, the plaintiff claiming that the animal which was sold by his wife belonged to him. John Procknow vs. Wm. Leifso, formerly of Brant, but now of Sask., in a suit to recover $200, by the plaintiff to be due him in wages.

Death of Mrs. F. Kimble

Mrs. F. Kimble, who had been confined to the Bruce County Hospital for seven weeks as a result of fracturing her hip, passed away on Sunday morning. Pneumonia which set in about the middle of the week was immediate cause of her demise. It was just seven weeks to the day since her late lamented husband passed away after a brief illness. The fact that both husband and wife were living and enjoying the best of health two months ago furnishes but another instance of the uncertainty of life. Mrs Kimble, whose maiden name was Rosanna Rowland, was born at Surtingham, Norfolk, England, 64 years ago and came to Canada with her late husband in 1885 settling at once at Walkerton and had resided here ever since. Fred Kimble of Winnipeg and Mrs. (Sergt.) Winters of Walkerton are only son and daughter. The funeral was held on Tuesday afternoon, being conducted by Rev. C. W. Cosens, pastor of the Methodist Church of which the deceased was a member. At her expressed wish the same friends acted as pall-bearers who bore her late husband to his last resting place seven weeks before. They were:—Messrs T. Hyslop, R. Bryce, J. H. Hunter, E. Walford, W. Taylor, E. H. Sheffied.

Charlie Bryce Lands.

Word was received yesterday that Charlie Bryce, son of Mr Robert Bryce who has been in a hospital in England for many months with severe wounds, had landed at Halifax.

Eli Gets There

Mr. E. Myles, our local furniture dealer, is one man who doesn't need to worry about the competition of mail order houses as he is able to give the public a service which the mail order houses can't begin to touch. For example on Monday, a customer living on the Owen Sound line came in on the noon C. P. R. train and ordered an outfit of furniture. Mr. Myles undertook to deliver it the same day and with the help of his motor trailer delivered the goods at the customer's home forty miles from Walkerton early in the evening, just a few hours after the customer had left home to go shopping. The customer was thus able to see the goods, personally selected them, got articles that thoroughly suited him, and at prices that could not be equalled in the larger city stores.

Mr. Rankin Appointed Principal

The Public School Board has appointed Mr. Thomas Rankin principal for the coming year at $1025 the same salary as his predecessor. Mr. Rankin was for 29 years Principal of Port Elgin public schools and has an excellent record as a teacher. Latterly he has been living retired but came here at Easter to supply the term from Easter to summer holidays owing to Mr. Willoughby's resignation. Mr. Rankin supplied here also on a previous occasion and has given such good satisfaction that the Public School Board feel they have been very fortunate in obtaining his services for the coming year. Although a long time in the work Mr. Rankin does not consider himself an old man. Indeed it is probable his best years in the teaching profession are still ahead of him.

Want "Something for Nothing"

There is an old adage that you can't get "something for nothing" in this world. But it is surprising how many people are looking for "something for nothing from the local newspapers. These people lose sight of the fact that the only and one means of making a living the publisher has is selling advertising space. Costing as it does more to produce all local papers than the subscription price, every cent of profit must come from advertising. And every line in the paper costs the publisher something. It represents a financial outlay in the same way that a lb of sugar costs a grocer money. It is the ware that the publisher in the role of merchant has to sell. Publishers make poor beggars and as a rule pay their way as they go, subscribing in cash to patriotic movements, charity and church quite as liberally as other classes in the community. It is therefore at times amusing and other times somewhat tiresome to note the persistency with which unthinking people endeavour to get the publisher's best wares without paying for them.

Street Lighting Contract Expires

The five year contract made by the Town with the Walkerton Electric Light and Power Co. for street-lighting in 1913 expires on July 1st. At the regular Council meeting on Monday night a committee composed of Mayor Johnston and the street lighting committee consisting of Chairman F. W. Lippert, Reeve Douglas and Coun. Pletsch were named to look into the matter of street-lighting, meet the local power company and report. If the Hydro Electric Power Co. had kept faith with the people of Walkerton, the local power plant would be operated to-day by hydro but Hydro has delayed until the Town finds itself with an expired contract on its hands. When Hydro is going to come it is an uncertainty. But what the citizens would wish to avoid now is the renewal of the contract for a fixed term which would mean a further excuse for delay in getting hydro in. In view of the stand taken by the rate-payers on the hydro by-law, such action by the Council would of course be out of the question. We believe that the Town's interests are in good hands and that the Committee will find the local power company willing to make reasonable terms in arranging for a temporary continuation of the present lighting service.

DO FARMERS MAKE MONEY?

(Guelph Mercury)

Does a farmer know whether he is making money or losing it? If he's making money, is he getting enough to carry the investment he has tied up in his "plant," and allow for his own wages? Would it be of any advantage to a farmer to know how much he was making or losing in a year?

These are questions that readily suggest themselves after hearing the address of Mr. A. Leith, who has charge of the farm management department on the staff of the O. A. C. His paper was given at the annual meeting of the Experimental Union, and showed a very great deal of computing in the work of preparation. His matter was intensely interesting, principally because it was new to a good many of those present, and also because it touched, in its conclusions, a thing most dear to all farmers and city men alike, the size of the bank account.

Mr. Leith, and those working with him, took the township of Caledon. This, itself lends a peculiar local interest to the investigation, that township bordering on the township of Erin in our county of Wellington. In a number of cases the information desired was hard to secure because the farmers would not give it to them. In such a case the only course open would be to pass on. In many cases it was only by considerable questioning that the information was secured. There were certain outstanding expenditures that the agriculturalists could give right off such as the outlay for binder twine, machinery etc.

On sixteen farms of 85 acres, or under, the figures show that the average capital invested was $7,132; the number of crop acres worked by a horse was 15, the number per man was 44, and the labor income was $702. By labor income, Mr. Leith explained, that he meant what a man really earned after allowing 5 per cent. on his invested capital. Not a very handsome amount surely.

It is interesting to note that as the size of the farms increased, the results seemed to be more satisfactory. On five farms of from 150 to 190 acres the number of acres per horse increased from 16 to 25, and per man from 44 to 68. The labor income one would be expected, also showed a decided increase. Take the 150 to 189 class. The labor income is given as $1,629. The capital is placed at $14,652. If Mr. Leith allowed 5 per cent. on this it would amount to practically an additional $730, which would bring his earnings up to about $2,429.

Another point that may have been generally overlooked—certainly it would not occur to many people not engaged in agriculture—was the disadvantage the small farmer was laboring under by reason of the fact that his non-productive capital was relatively much larger than the man with the bigger farm. The figures showed that in the 85 acre class the average capital was $7,132, and of this amount $4,317 was productive capital, or practically 60 per cent. while in the 150 to 189 class the average capital was $14,652, of which $10,129, or 69 per cent. was productive capital. In other words the small farmer had practically ten per cent. more unproductive capital than the large farmer.

Of course there are bound to be exceptions to these figures. There are small farmers who will be away above the figures given by Mr. Leith. On the other hand there will be others below them. It is averages that he gives—the good with the bad, and the thrifty with the shiftless. It is an interesting study and one that will no doubt more and more occupy the attention of the agriculturists of this and other provinces.

A millionaire merchant says: "My success is probably due to the fact that at night I stored my mind and during the day I mind my store."

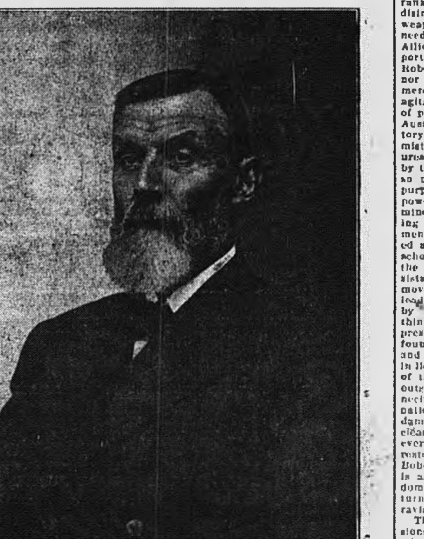
Let there be no mistake about it. All persons of sixteen and over, male or female, must register on Saturday, June 22nd. If you have reached the allotted span of years and several score over and able to go to the nearest registration booth you must do so. If you are too old and feeble then registrars will be sent to you, but you must register. To neglect to do so will mean a fine of one hundred dollars and imprisonment for any term not exceeding one month.



LETTER FROM FRANCE.

Trooper Max Wilson writes his sister, Mrs Lorne A. Eedy from the Front:—

So far I have rather enjoyed my experience in France. There is lots of sport of one kind and another. We hunt the Hun and we hunt rats, mice and lice—absolutely no peace. We are always after something. The mice and rats in the dugouts are something scandalous. One day while I was asleep one big rat took a can opener and opened my tin of bulky beef and ate it and just left me the can. You can hang things on a wire from the ceiling and they will actually get it.

This little old France is surely a pretty country but I don't think I would care to make my home here just at present. The Germans are liable to drop a shell in and move your house for you most any time. If you ever start a war though, come over here with it. This country is just naturally made for fighting in and I don't think the people would mind a bit, they're so used to it.

I saw a bunch of U. S. soldiers the other day. It is the first time I have seen the Sammies in bulk form. A bunch of them came to our camp for a bath and they sure needed it. That is authentic state with all of us though over here and we never miss an opportunity of getting on a bath parade. We have always a kind of vague hope that the seam squirrels will be a little less plentiful on the clean clothes they have us than on the ones we take off. It is just a toss up though. They fumigated our blankets to day and that causes much discussion as to whether it makes our small friends more lively or stupifies them. I have a theory of my own.

DANIEL KNECHTEL

Veteran Furniture Manufacturer who is preparing a fine Public Park to present to the Town of Hanover.

I believe that they breed in that fumigation but don't like it, so immediately a bunch of blankets go through they take that as their excursion train and all leave home also never to return.

One thing we have been informed of by General Curry is that if we are killed we don't die but just step into immortality. Still I have no desire to become immortal just at present, pleasant as it must be. I would much sooner the old Hun became immortal than me. This little old world looks pretty good yet.

We have nice little corrigated iron huts to sleep in this place made out of three pieces of roofing. I don't mean that there are only three pieces to the whole but that it just takes three pieces to make one part of the walls and roof. Of course you are always wild by looking for a place to hang something but nothing doing. Everything has to find a place on the floor. There is naturally an awful conglomeration of legs arms and equipment when we all get in.

I was teasing a little French girl about her red hair (you seldom see one with red hair) and she swore at me in real good Canadian cuss words. I was quite startled but I don't suppose the child knew what she was saying and of course I had to laugh at her so I suppose she'll do it again.

The Princess Pats gave the 45th a nice concert the night before last all comedy and it was pretty good. They have a good concert party. You would be surprised at the amount of talent there is in the army anyhow.

We had two baseball games to-day. We play indoor baseball out doors. Can you understand that it is something like the inside in or outside out outside inside inside out. It is very simple now I have explained what I mean. The game is much better than outdoor baseball for people who are not experts and it doesn't require much room. Any little old clear space will do.

We have sixteen platoons in the battallion and each platoon furnishes a team so we expect to have quite a strong competition before Fall in our spare time as a kind of change from the other sports mentioned above.

A fellow by the name of Slim Galbraith(little Willie) who is six foot three and weighs one hundred and forty pounds and sleeps with me. I used to know him in Strathmore. He claims that he could make Bairnsfather's fortune if he could just see him. Poor Slim has hard work to get a coat to fit him his arms stick out about a foot and he always claims they are freezing. Naturally he isn't a very hot bed fellow but he is a natural born comedian and no matter what he has to tell you about he tells it in such a way that everyone has to laugh. I will have to quit this very interesting letter pretty soon as it is getting late. However I will be able to go to bed quite satisfied that I have told you all about the war.

My old friend Buck (Buckingham) is in the next platoon so I am not with him but see him every day and we manage to spend quite a bit of our spare time together. Buck has got to the stage where he takes the war quite seriously which is a big mistake for there are really lots of very amusing things happening all the time.

THAT UNQUENCHABLE SPIRIT

Lt-Col. J. J. Fraser, D. S. O., Walkerton, has the greatest admiration for unquenchable spirit of Thomas Atkins.

"You cannot fraze him" he says. He is as quick with his wit as he is with his bayonet. Sarcasm is his long suit. He makes a burlesque of his own wounds as well as of the German artillery which caused them."

A soldier was brought into the dressing station from a compound fracture of the leg. Asked how it happened, he said "Well, Sir, it was this way; I was leaning up against a German barrage enjoying a cigarette when the barrage suddenly lifted and I fell into a shell-hole and broke my leg."

Col. Fraser tells of a German prisoner who because he could speak English fluently was quite a "mainare" to the Colonials. One day an Australian asked him whom the Germans regarded as the best fighters on the Western Front. Without a moment's hesitation, the German replied "The 1st. Canadian Division, the 3rd. Canadian Division, and the New Zealanders." He probably was not in the humor to lend bouquets to the Australian.

A Canadian military man who has seen service overseas says there is a good deal in what the German said about the Canadians. This is his explanation;

"The 1st Canadians were made up of the fare-devils eager for the fray, so eager they were afraid they would not reach the front in time. Among the 2nd Canadians were men who enlisted believing that the war would be over before they reached the front. The 3rd. Canadians was made up of men who were driven into the fight by a sense of duty. They realized the war was bound to come. They knew the seriousness of it. They reached the brutal nature of it. They had no illusions when they reached up."

Bohemians Now Aspire To Sever All Connection With Austrian Empire

THE war has brought to light, from time to time, some odd political situations. For instance, Austria, moved by the desire for Balkan conquest, has been subjugated by Germany while the two remain nominally allies in a war against right and justice. Furthermore, as she wars against the enemy outside her gates, Austria finds still more dangerous enemies within, in the shape of those Slav nationalities of the Dual Monarchy whom she has vainly endeavored to take to her cruel heart. At that heart lay the sharp, piercing point of a brutal despotism against which they have been thrust. But those nationalities have refused to be sacrificed; their statesmen and people rise in protest; their soldiers mutiny and desert to the enemy; and their civilian compatriots in other lands arm and join the Allies on the fighting fronts. The Slavs seek and are determined to have their national independence, and to-day there is, without doubt, among the twenty-odd nations now linked in the great crusade, that, at the peace table, the claims to national organization and liberation of the peoples dwelling within the Austro-Hungarian empire must be satisfied, if a permanent peace is ever to be established.

It is notable that Lord Robert Cecil, British Minister of Blockade, has not only publicly recognized this factor in the international problems of the war, but has expressed himself in sympathetic terms concerning the Czech national movement. There is no longer any hesitation, in allied ranks, about the need of politically disintegrating Austria as a powerful weapon in winning the war. That need now determines in part the Allies' active policy, so that it is important to emphasize, as did Lord Robert, that neither the Bohemian nor the Jugo-Slav movement is merely the product of an artificial agitation on the part of a handful of politicians and literary men. The Austrian has read the lessons of history too well ever to make such a mistake. The recent Austrian measures of repression of Bohemia, whereby the country has been divided into so many arbitrary districts, for the purpose of placing a preponderating power in the hands of the German minority, show that the German ruling elements take the Czech movement as a serious political blow aimed at Austrian imperialism. That a scholar like Dr. Masaryk is to-day the head and front of Bohemian resistance is proof less of an academic movement than of a determination to lead the Bohemian cause to victory by the enlistment of the clearest thinkers of the country. Bohemia presents an organized people prepared in earnest. Austria knows it and dreads the consequences. There in lies the significance to the Austrian of the writing on the wall. To the outsiders, looking on at the life-or-decline struggles of this small Slav nationality amid its political Gotterdammerung, the writing is equally clear-cut and convincing. More than ever it becomes apparent that the restoration of liberty of action to the Bohemian, as to the rest of the Slavs, is as necessary to the world's freedom and material welfare as time to return to France and Belgium of their ravished lands.

The Bohemian political representations, as already pointed out, constitute an attempt to secure for the German minority that official power which would outweigh their present inferiority in numbers. Formerly there was one stadtholder or lieutenant-governor, appointed for the whole country; now there are in addition what Dr. Masaryk has termed twelve "pashas," appointed from Vienna, who by administering all the patronage, will hope to break up the power of the Czechs, destroy the Czech majority in the Vienna Reichsrat, and finally bring about the total dismemberment of Bohemia. The Austrian Reichsrat, it is plain, is to be Germanized through and through, so that it will be unable to raise even a finger against the policy of the Government. Austria is determined to preserve outwardly the semblance of a happy, harmonious family, when Parliament meets again, and to see that Pan-Germanism has its day. Such disintegration faces the country, and the twelve "pashas" policy, the answer to that Italian-Slav agreement and support which may yet make of Austria a mere geographical term, may after all have come too late.

Sauerkraut and Pretzels.

Just as many Germans are to-day anxious to prove that they were born in Alsace and are more French than German, so are the manufacturers of sauerkraut and pretzels endeavoring to prove that these foods are not Germanic in origin. A large pretzel company declares that a historian states that the pretzel is of Roman origin, and that the name is probably some Roman derivation from the middle Latin "brachillum," a little arm, compared to the Italian "bracciatello," a baked article similar to the pretzel. Another authority says that in the early Christian church the pretzel was a gift of the priest to the children, a reward for learning prayers, and that the form of pretzels suggests folded hands.

Population of the World.

In 1787 the population of the earth, according to Busching, was about 1,000,000,000; in 1800, according to Fabri and Stein, only 900,000,000; in 1833, according to Stein and Horschelman, 872,000,000. In 1868 Dietrici estimated it at 1,266,000,000 and Kolb, in 1865 at 1,220,000,000. According to the latest calculations the earth is inhabited by 1,400,000,000 happy (?) human beings.—New York Tribune.

AIRPLANE ACCIDENTS.

Fear Is Rarely Experienced In Actual Flights.

The loss of life in airplane work in war is so heavy that it is important to diminish to the utmost the accidents which occur during training, which is costing so many Japanese beginners so dearly. The first step, obviously, is to find out what are the causes of accidents. In a London medical journal an analysis has just been made of the causes of accidents in the case of 9,000 flights involving 4,000 hours' flying, by the students of an airplane school. Out of the 9,000 flights there were 58 crashes, or one in every 156 flights. A crash is defined as such an accident as involves the removal of the airplane to workshops for repair or rebuilding. In the 58 crashes, 16 airmen were injured, which is equivalent to one pupil injured in 560 flights. Almost all the accidents were due to error of judgment. This was the case in 42 cases out of 58. Then came seven cases in which the pupil lost their force owing to brain fatigue, one of airplane defect, and four in which the cause was unavoidable. Under the headings "fear" and "physical illness"—two causes of airplane accidents—there are no cases. It seems that fear is rarely experienced in actual flights, the mind being too much occupied and concentrated. Fear is seldom experienced in a degree sufficient to disturb flying. "Many, however, confess to a sense of danger lurking somewhere at the back of the head, but say that it rarely, if ever, asserts itself." As to physical illness, cold and fatigue sometimes produce faintness or stupor. There have been faintings from high altitudes or wounds. Two pupils suffered in the air from attacks of malaria. One had an epileptic fit. —The New Easte

Petrograd's Scourge.

That typhus should be reported on the increase in Petrograd is not surprising to the Lancet (London), which reminds one that typhus has long been prevalent, mildly at least, in Petrograd. Now, however, with the Government disorganized, refugees crowding in, and a general breakdown in sanitation agencies of Russia, naturally typhus will come back, concludes this journal. Yet it need not:

"With sanitation typhus fever gradually disappeared from Britain and more advanced countries; practically, exanthematic typhus in England may be said to be an extinct disease. But it is otherwise in Russia, and particularly in Petrograd, where personal and domestic hygiene is little practiced. When personal uncleanliness, infestation by lice, overcrowding, and other insanitary conditions are aggravated by shortage of food and other necessaries, as well as by the withdrawal of skilled medical and sanitary supervision, it is little wonder that a disease like exanthematic typhus has been able to increase and multiply. In the absence of a competent and responsible health authority to enforce appropriate preventive measures, including the isolation of the sick in hospital and destruction of body vermin, the present epidemic will probably continue for some time.

"There is, therefore, the dismal prospect immediately before the people of Petrograd that there will be a considerable increase of physical suffering to many of them, with a high proportion of fatal results, from a pestilence that is easily preventable if the teachings of modern medicine are followed."

China's Gains From the War.

China stands to gain far more than she might lose by the war. The balance is almost wholly in her favor. In it are to be reckoned her hope of release from the staggering indemnities inherited from the Boxer trouble, probable relief from foreign resolutions that keep her import duties at an unprofitable level, restoration of sovereignty over territorial concessions wrested from her in her greatest hours of weakness, more generous co-operation in developing her natural resources, and a more certain guarantee of her democracy and her political integrity.

Participation in the war gives China a double leverage for the attainment of the last named of these potential benefits. It will operate both internally and externally. The recent monarchical restoration of Gen. Chang Hsun served to emphasize the lack of cohesion that threatens China within. It was followed by contigued rumblings of southern secession, which persisted up to the moment of declaring war on Germany. At any time China might have burst into the flame of a civil strife between the radical south and the reactionary north. The lacing of a national enemy should be, as always, a powerful agent for quieting civil internal dissension and for putting China's quarreling patriots shoulder to shoulder. The external safeguard of the Chinese democracy resides, of course, in the benevolent protection assured by the family of allied nations.—Carroll K. Michener, in Review of Reviews.

Ten Burglars Arrested.

Berliner Tageblatt, Monday, February 11, 1918: "The detective force of Berlin has succeeded in tracing a gang of ten burglars in Moabit and has arrested most of them. The burglars generally worked in the larger towns of the neighborhood. They sold in Berlin the booty, consisting for the most part of provisions, such as coffee, of which several hundredweight was found in their possession. Equipped with revolvers and the most up-to-date burglar tools, they perpetrated their latest burglary in Kottbus, where they thoroughly ransacked, among others, the apartment of the military commander of the town.

FORMER GREENOCK MEN

Both Father and Son Meet Violent Deaths Within Two Weeks of One Another

The family of Henry Tucker, who formerly lived on the Chamber's farm, Greenock, about six miles west of Walkerton, has been twice stricken by death in a violent form during the past month. On Sunday, May 19th, a son, George H. Tucker, was mysteriously murdered near Toronto. On May 29th, the father, Henry Tucker was fatally injured in a runaway accident and died three days later.

The manner of Mr. Tucker's death was as follows:—A farmer's team got frightened while standing in front of the flour mill at Orangeville and ran away. Mr. Tucker ran out and tried to stop them and fell. It is thought the hub of one of the wheels struck him on the forehead.

From the time Tucker was admitted to the hospital no hopes whatever were held out for his recovery. His skull was so badly fractured that it was impossible for him to get better. An operation was performed and a portion of the skull which pressed on the brain was removed. At times Tucker regained consciousness and recognized members of his family. Mr. Tucker had attended a number of the evangelistic services that are being held in the Baptist church and professed conversion. Deceased leaves a widow, two sons and three daughters to mourn his death.

The son, George H. Tucker who was brutally murdered on Sunday night May 19th, was a member of a C. P. R. bridge building gang. He was killed by his assailant with a blow of a stiletto as he lay dozing in a bunk in a boarding car, which stood on the Roman Stone Company's siding on the outskirts of Weston.

The Guns and Ammunition department this month is of special interest containing as it does a carefully written and practical article by one who has been "over there" on Sharpshooting in the Trenches. Every prospective soldier should read this "article for it tells the soldier how to shoot to kill, and this is what it is needed if we are to win, this war. There are other articles in this section worthy of note and the Fishing Notes section is up to its usual standard. Rod and Gun, the magazine of outdoor life in Canada is published by W. J. LETTER FROM JOE CAIN.

Mrs. John J. Cain had an interesting letter on Friday from her son, Pte. Joe. Cain, who has been ill with trench fever and was recently removed from Francaste a hospital at Cardiff, Wales Joe writes:—

Just a short note to say that I have landed safely in England and am in dock for some time with trench fever. It acts like rheumatism. I was up for a couple of days when I was in the hospital in France but I could hardly walk ten feet and my temperature went up and I was forced back to bed where I have been ever since and on milk diet. I saw several boys of the 160th Bruce Batt'n in March but I have seen very few of the old boys who have seen more of it. I don't want you to worry about me. I will be all right and am getting well looked after. I have just seen two Canadians in the hospital besides myself and they both say this is a lovely city. I am the only one left now without a scratch in my section and was when we left Belgium. They were nearly all killed with the exception of three wounded, leaving me the only one out of some twenty men and a corporal since I went to France. The ones that were killed went all in one night and I and a chum had to return to camp alone, after fixing up the wounded and getting them to a dressing station. We very often had to sleep with our clothes on and them wet and muddy. That is one cause I think of the sickness now. I don't want you to worry. We will win in the end and will bring glory to the Land of the Maple by deeds of valor and steadiness.

Twice Sorry

Twice in the same day a Toronto lady turned the garden hose on her neighbor. Quite unintentional. A mere accident. The first time, she was sorry. A new angle in the Prohibition Act has been revealed since the Dominion Order-in-Council making it illegal to transport alcoholic beverages came into force. The public have been aware that it was illegal to transport liquor from one province to another, but now the discovery is made that in strict terms of the Act it is illegal to move it from a building in which it may be stored to another building. Therewith reserve supplies of liquor, if the Act is strictly enforced, must continue to occupy their present homes until the stock is exhausted or risk running foul of the law if they move to another house.

"I know, Bill, admitted Jake, thoughtfully "an I would join, but I don't see how I can."

"Why not?" persisted the first. "What is to prevent you?"

"Well, it's jes' this way, Bill," declared Jake. "There has got to be somebody in the firm to weigh this here wool."

FEELIN' FINE

Makes no diff'rence time o' day,
Here at home or fur away,
If he's sick, or feelin' blue,
If he's cold an' hungry too,
Full of gout and roomertiz,
Ask Bill Selby how he is,
An' his face will fairly shine,
While he says he's "feelin' fine!"

Ol' Bill Selby's full o' grit,
Though he never brags of it;
Takes things cool as cool kin be;
Has a smile for you an' me.
Never growls about his work,
Never thinks to loaf or shirk,
Never answers with a whine,
Allus says he's "feelin' fine!"

We have seen him hobblin' round,
Nigh bent over to the ground,
Victim of the ager, too,
Workin' for the well-to-do.
Fingers cramped an' cold inside,
But chock-full o' grit an' pride.
Ask him how he is to day,

What a feller orter be;

Makin' all the world feel glum,
Nursin' aches we never had,
Makin' ev'rybody sad,
We should brace ourselves a bit,
Make a show of havin' grit;
An', like Selby, never whine,
Tell the world we're "feelin' fine."

R. M. Beemer, C. P. R. Agent, applied to have rebate of $3.91 on freight, which had been rebated by mistake, returned to him.

Mr. Littlejohn, City Clerk of Toronto, invited the Council to join in a petition for the abolition of the Dominion Senate. Do some of the Councillors expect to reach the Senate some day? Anyway they turned the petition down. It was filed.

Town Clerk Collins called attention to the fact that the street lighting contract expires July 1st. Referred to Street Lighting Com.

Mrs. Chris. Gateman wrote the Council that she had been unable to use the Town water for three months last winter as the pipes leading into her place were frozen and asked for rebate. Referred to Waterworks Com.

By-laws No. 1175 and 1176, providing for the laying of sidewalks 4 ft. wide on the east and west sides of Yonge St. over the Bridge, were given the necessary formal readings.

Chief Ferguson reported $5.50 police court fees for the month of May.

The Finance Committee, Coun. F. W. Lippert Chairman, recommended the payment of a number of small accounts. Also recommended that the Chief be given a list of all citizens not having their closets in shape as required by the by-law, the Chief to notify them at once to comply.—Carried.

Wm. Yates For Fire Chief

The Fire & Water Com., Reeve Douglas Chairman, recommended that Mrs. Gateman's request for a rebate be granted; that as the Committee could not get a recommendation from the Fireman as to whom they wanted for Chief, that as the resignation of Chief Alex George, presented at the last meeting be accepted, and Wm. Yates be appointed Chief at a salary at $25. Carried.

The Property Committee, Coun. Harry Truax Chairman, recommended that $1500 fire insurance be placed on the Canada Saddlery building and $500 on the machinery and contents; that the offer of $300 received through A. R. Williams Co. for the drop hammer be accepted. Carried,

A. R. Williams Co. of Toronto, who have the selling of the Canada Saddlery plant for the town, reported that they had an offer of $300 for the 600 lb. drop hammer. As the hammer cost only $300 in the first place and was partly broken, this is considered a good offer.

Coun. Lippert suggested that the small stuff at the Saddlery plant be removed to the Town Hall for safe keeping.—Agreed.

The Streets Committee, Coun. Geo. Lettner chairman, recommended that the scheme to build a sidewalk between Messrs Petteplace's and Searle's residences be dropped as there were not sufficient signers.

The Street-lighting Committee, Coun. F. W. Lippert chairman, recommended that the Mayor and the Street-lighting Committee meet the Walkerton Electric Light and Power Co re the expiring of street lighting contract and report to the Council at a later date.—Carried.

Couns. Truax and George moved that Mr. F. B. James be appointed Town Engineer under the Water Courses Act.—Carried.

Couns. Lippert and Vogan moved that the Town Engineer be handed Mr McDowell's report on water course (east of river) through Walker property and that he check same over and make award on matter.—Carried.

Reeve Douglas brought up the matter of citizens using the town water for washing their autos. People who do this, he said, use as much water as 15 ordinary families and they ought to pay extra for it.

Other members expressed the opinion that not much car-washing was done by private owners.

Coun George said that as there is sufficient water works revenue to pay debentures, running expenses and everything, the man who uses a pump is getting fire protection for nothing That means that the water works rates are too high.

Town Clerk Collins said that while the water works revenue to-day paid everything, there had been 15 to 20 years when there was a deficit which had to be met by the tax-payers. Now for the first time, the system is self-sustaining

Val. Schurter, the popular principal of Chepstow School, and son of Township Treasurer M. M. Schurter of Greenock, left on Thursday for London to report for military service.

SGT. TED WILHELM HOME

First of Seven Walkerton Boys In Mortar Battery To Make Canada—Tells How Ed. Eidt Won D. C. M.

Another of Walkerton's "splendid men" who have played heroes' parts on European battle fields returned home on Friday night in the person of Sergt. "Ted" Wilhelm, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Wilhelm. Of the seven Walkerton boys of the 10th. Trench Mortar Batt'y which has been in the thick of it the past two years, Ted is the first back to Canada. Four of the seven now sleep in heroes graves in France, and two are still on the firing line. The seven boys are:— Leith Russell, Evesits Truax, Ed Eidt Chester Cunningham, Alvin Wilton, Roy Oberle, Ted Wilhelm.

Ted "got his" at Passchendaele on October 29th, 1917. A jagged piece of shrapnel from a bursting shell went through his right fore-arm One of his companions was killed by the same shell and another seriously wounded. The cords and muscles of his arm were badly shattered by the shrapnel and the bone injured. After seven and a half months treatment Ted has some slight use of his hand again and he hopes in time to get it back to a fair degree of usefulness.

To the Telescope Ted. was good enough to describe the gun the Battery uses. The trench mortar which is operated by three or four men, is a wicked weapon, better in its line than anything the Germans have. It takes a three inch shell about fifteen inches and weighing 10 lbs and throws it at the rate of 50 to 60 a minute. Its ordinary range is from 250 to 500 yards but it has now been perfected to work up to 900 yards. The gun is operated from the front line and the havoc that 50 or 60 shells a minute creates in an enemy trench is more easily imagined than described. There are 8 guns in a battery, a battery being attached to an infantry brigade. At Vimy Ridge the 10th. Trench Mortar Battery which the Walkerton boys belonged were throwing about 800 shells a day from each gun. This so attracted the attention of the enemy that it was impossible to keep the gun pits, so hot was the return fire. Our boys then operated the guns from shell holes entirely having no overhead protection.

The Trench mortar shells are timed to explode in 12 seconds. Occasionally they misfire and are laid aside. Ted tells of one occasion when a shell misfired after it was timed to explode. It was then that Ed Eidt who was handling the gun, showed the stuff he was made of by warning all the boys to duck and then carrying the shell out and pitching it out of danger before it exploded. The only man wounded was Ed himself, who got a scratch wound from the flying shrapnel. Ed did the very same trick the next day. And it was for this heroic conduct that he was awarded the D. C. M

Ted spent seven months in England at the Epsom Hospital where four to five thousand Canadians are in various stages of recuperation. He reports that he was used fine in the hospitals and speaks highly of the medical devices that are being invented by British Scientists for the wounded. Ted will report at London on the 21st. and will likely undergo further treatment for some time before receiving his discharge.

HANOVER

Mrs. H. H. Miller who was in Toronto when she learned of the death of her son Fraser at the Front arrived home Tuesday. She was accompanied from Toronto by her son, Mr. Moore A. Miller of Weyburn Sask., and her daughter, Mrs. W. E. Adams and two children of Vancouver, B. C.—Hanover Post.

Mr. Daniel Knechtel bought five acres of land from Mr. Harry Badertscher, situated north of the Hanover Portland Cement Co.'s power house and south of the Saugeen River, and is spending considerable money fitting it up for a park. The place is a pretty natural rotunda, and when it is cleaned up, the trees trimmed, the stumps pulled out and plowing and levelling done it will be a real beauty spot. Mr. Knechtel has put up a building for the use of picnic parties and will have an auto road built. Work of improvement is still in progress and will be for some time. "Knechtel Park" will ultimately, we understand, be deeded to the town and in the meantime the citizens of Hanover will have the opportunity of using it, holding picnics there etc.

The meeting called in the interests of improving the Hanover cemetery was largely attended. Mr. D. Knechtel acted as chairman. A vote was taken as to the advisability of employing a permanent caretaker and it was carried unanimously. A new set of rules and regulations was passed. An assessment of $2 a year on a full plot and $1 on a half plot will be made to meet the cost of employing a caretaker and other expenses.

the anyhow, an' he took a case knife he'd sharpened—an' he cut a lady's head off with it!"

Mrs. Baxter screamed faintly.

"An' he got hung, mamma! If you don't believe it you can ask One Eye Beljus. I guess he knows. An' he sold this suit to One Eye Beljus when he was in jail, mamma. He sold it to him before he got hung, mamma."

"Hush, Jane!"

But Jane couldn't hush now. "An' he had that suit on when he cut the lady's head off, mamma, an' that's why it's haunted. They cleaned it all up except a few little spots of it!—

"Jane!" shouted her mother, "you must not talk about such things, and Genesis mustn't tell you stories of that sort!"

"Well, how could he help it if he told me about Willie?" Jane urged reasonably.

"Never mind! Did that crazy ch—Did Willie leave the baskets in that dreadful place?"

"Yes'm, an' his watch an' pin," Jane informed her impressively. "An' One Eye Beljus wanted to know if Genesis knew Willie, because One Eye Beljus wanted to know if Genesis thought Willie could get the $3.60, an' One Eye Beljus wanted to know if Genesis thought he could get anything more out of him besides that.

"He told Genesis he hadn't told Willie he could have the suit, after all. He just told him he thought he could, but he wouldn't say for certain till he brought him the $3.60. So Willie left all his things there, an' his watch an'—"

"That will do!" Mrs. Baxter's voice was grave. "I don't want to hear any more!"

Mrs. Baxter went hurriedly into William's room and made a brief inspection of his clothes closet and dressing table; then she strode to the window and called loudly:

"Genesis!"

"Yes'm!" came the voice from below.

"Go to that lumber yard where Mr. William is at work and tell him here to me at once. If he declines to come tell him"— Her voice broke oddly. She choked, but Jane could not decide with what emotion. "Tell him—tell him I ordered you to use force if necessary! Hurry!"

"Yes'm!"

Jane ran to the window in time to see Genesis departing seriously through the back gate.

"Mamma"—

"Don't talk to me now, Jane," Mrs. Baxter said crisply. "I want you to go down in the yard, and when Willie comes tell him I'm waiting for him here in his own room. And don't come with him, Jane. Hurry!"

"Yes, mamma." Jane was pleased with this appointment. She anxiously desired to be the first to see how Willie "looked."

He looked flurried and flustered and breathless, and there were blisters upon the reddened palms of his hands. "What on earth's the matter, mother?" he asked as he stood panting before her. "Genesis said something was wrong, and he said you told him to hit me if I wouldn't come."

"Oh, no!" she cried. "I only meant I thought perhaps you wouldn't obey any ordinary message"—

"Well, well, it doesn't matter, but please hurry and say what you want to, because I got to get back and"—

"No," Mrs. Baxter said quietly, "you're not going back to count any more shingles, Willie. How much have you earned?"

He swallowed, but spoke bravely. "Thirty-six cents. But I've been getting lots faster the last two hours, and there's a good deal of time before 6 o'clock. Mother"—

"No," she said. "You're going over to that horrible place where you've left your clothes and your watch and all those other things in the two baskets, and you're going to bring them home at once."

"Mother!" he cried, aghast. "Who told you?"

"It doesn't matter. You don't want your father to find out, do you? Then get those things back here as quickly as you can. They'll have to be fumigated after being in that den."

"They've never been out of the baskets," he protested hotly, "except just to be looked at. They're my things, mother, and I had a right to do what I needed to with 'em, didn't I?" His utterance became difficult. "You and father just can't understand, and you won't do anything to help me"—

"Willie, you can go to the party," she said gently. "You didn't need those frightful clothes at all."

"I do!" he cried. "I got to have 'em! I can't go in my day clo'es! There's a reason you wouldn't understand why I can't. I just can't!"

"Yes," she said, "you can go to the party."

"I can't either—not unless you give me $3.24 or unless I can get back to the lumber yard and earn the rest before"—

"No!" And the warm color that had rushed over Mrs. Baxter during Jane's sensational recital returned with a vengeance. Her eyes flashed. "If you'd rather I sent a policeman for those baskets I'll send one. I should prefer to do it—much—and to have that rascal arrested. If you don't want me to send a policeman you can go for them yourself, but you must start within ten minutes, because if you don't I'll telephone headquarters. Ten minutes, Willie, and I mean it!"

He cried out, protesting. She would make him a thing of scorn forever and soil his honor if she sent a policeman. Mr. Beljus was a fair and honest tradesman, he explained, passionately; also the garments in question, though not entirely new nor of the highest mode, were of good material and in splendid condition.

Unmistakably they were evening clothes and such a bargain at $15 that William would guarantee to sell them for twenty after he had worn them this one evening. Mr. Beljus himself had said that he would not even think of letting them go at fourteen to anybody else, and as for the two poor baskets of worn and useless articles offered in exchange, and a bent scarf-pin, and a wormout old silver watch that had belonged to Great Uncle Ben—why, the $10.40 allowed upon them was beyond all ordinary liberality. It was almost charity.

There was only one place in town where evening clothes were rented, and the suspicious persons in charge had insisted that William obtain from his father a guarantee to insure the return of the garments in perfect condition. So that was hopeless. And wasn't it better also to wear clothes which had known only one previous occupant, as was the case with Mr. Beljus' offering, than to hire what chance hundreds had hired? Finally, there was only one thing to be considered, and this was the fact that William had to have those clothes.

"Six minutes," said Mrs. Baxter, glancing implacably at her watch. "When it's ten I'll telephone."

CHAPTER XVII.

Youth and Mr. Parcher.

AND the end of it was, of course, victory for the woman—victory both moral and physical.

Three-quarters of an hour later she was unburdening the contents of the two baskets and putting the things back in place, illuminating these actions with an expression of strong distaste in spite of broken assurances that Mr. Beljus had not more than touched any of the articles offered to him for valuation.

At dinner, which was unusually early that evening, Mrs. Baxter did not often glance toward her son. She kept her eyes from that white face and spent most of her time in urging upon Mr. Baxter that he should be prompt in dressing for a card club meeting which he and she were to attend that evening.

William retired to his own room, where he lay upon his bed in the darkness. He heard the evening noises of the house faintly through the closed door—voices and the clatter of metal and china from the faraway kitchen, Jane's laugh in the hall, the opening and closing of the doors. Then his father seemed to be in distress about something. William heard him complaining to Mrs. Baxter, and, though the words were indistinct, the tone was vigorously plaintive.

Everything was quiet now. The open window showed as a greenish oblong set in black, and William knew that in a little while there would come through the stillness of that window the distant sound of violins. And as he lay on his dreary bed his thought of brightly lighted rooms where other boys were dressing eagerly, faces and hair shining, hearts beating high—boys who would possess this last evening and the "last waltz together," the last smile and the last sigh.

Now arrived that moment he had most painfully anticipated, and dance music drifted on the night, but there came a tapping upon his door, and a soft voice spoke.

"Will-ee?"

With a sharp exclamation William swung his legs over the edge of the bed and sat up. Of all things he desired not he desired no conversation with or on the part of Jane. But he had forgotten to lock his door. The handle turned, and a dim little figure marched in.

"Willie, Adelia's goin' to put me to bed."

"You g'way from here," he said hastily. "I haven't got time to talk to you. I'm busy."

"Well, you can wait a minute, can't you?" she asked reasonably. "I had to tell you a joke on mamma."

"I don't want to hear any jokes."

"Well, I had to tell you 'this one 'cause she told me to. Oh!" Jane clapped her hand over her mouth and jumped up and down, offering a fantastic silhouette against the light of the open door. "Oh, oh, oh!"

"What's matter?"

"She said I mustn't, mustn't tell that she told me to tell! My goodness! I forgot that! Mamma took me off alone right after dinner, an' she told me to tell you this joke on her a little after she an' papa had left the house but she said, 'Above all things,' she said, 'don't let Willie know I said to tell him.' That's just what she said, an' here that's the very first thing I had to go an' do!"

"Well, what of it?"

Jane quieted down. "Said you beat what a fuss papa was makin' when he was dressin' for the card party!"

"I don't care if"—

"He had to go in his reglar clo'es," whispered Jane triumphantly. "An' this is the joke on mamma: You know what papa that let Jane dress suit 'way out? Well, mamma thinks that tailor must think she's crazy or somep'n, 'cause she took papa's dress suit to him last Monday to get it pressed for this card party, an' she guesses he must of understood her to tell him to do lots besides just pressin' it. Anyway, he went an' altered it, an' he took it 'way, 'way in again. An' this afternoon when it came back it was even tighter'n what it was in the first place, an' papa couldn't begin to get into it!

"Well, an' so it's all pressed an' et'ything, an' she stopped on the way out an' whispered to me that she'd got an upset over the joke on her that she couldn't remember where she put it when she took it out o' papa's room after he gave up tryin' to get inside of it. An' that," cried Jane—"that's the funniest thing of all! Why, it's layin' right on her bed this very minute!"

In one bound William leaped through the open door. Two seconds sufficed for his passage through the hall to his mother's bedroom, and there, neatly spread upon the lace coverlet and brighter than coronation robes, fairer than Joseph's holy coat, it lay!

As a hurried worldling in almost perfectly fitting evening clothes passed out of his father's gateway and hurried toward the place whence faintly came the sound of dance music a child's voice called sweetly from an unidentified window of the darkened house behind him:

"Well, anyway, you try an' have a good time, Willie!"

Jane's friendly but ill chosen "anyway" had touched doubts already annoying him. He was certain to be late to the party—so late, indeed, that it might prove difficult to obtain a proper number of dances with the sacred girl in whose honor the celebration was being held.

But as he hastened onward his spirits rose, and he did reply to Jane, after all, though he had placed a hundred yards between them.

"Yes, and you can bet your bottom dollar I will too!" he muttered between his determined teeth.

Spellbound groups of uninvited persons, most of them colored, rested their forearms upon the rail of the Parchers' picket fence, offering to William's view a silhouette like that of a crowd at a fire. Beyond the fence bright forms went skimming, shimmering, wavering over a white platform, while high overhead the young moon sprayed a thinner light down through the maple leaves to where processions of rosy globes hung floating in the blue night.

Yonder—somewhere in the breath taking radiance—danced his queen with all her court about her. Queen and court, thought William, and nothing less exorbitant could have expressed his feeling.

A sense of picturesqueness—his own picturesqueness—made him walk rather theatrically as he passed through the groups of humble onlookers outside the picket fence. Many of these turned to stare at the belated guest, and William was unconscious of neither their low estate nor his own quality as a patrician man about town in almost perfectly fitting evening dress. A faint, cold smile was allowed to appear upon his lips, and a fragment from a story he had read came momentarily to his mind—Through the gaping crowds the young Augustan noble was borne down from the Palatine, scornful in his jewelled litter." * * *

An admiring murmur reached William's ear. "Oh, oh, honey, look at'em long tall suit! 'At's a rich boy, honey!"

"Yessum, so! Bet he got his pockets pack' full o' twenty dollah gol' pieces right dis minute!"

"You right, honey!"

William allowed the coldness of his faint smile to increase—to become scornful. These poor sidewalk creatures little knew what seethed inside the alabaster of the young Augustan noble! What was it to them that this was Miss Pratt's last night and that he intended to dance and dance with her, on and on?

Upon one of the posts of the gateway there rested the elbow of a contemplative man, middle aged or a little worse. Of all persons having pleasure or business within the bright inclosure he was that evening the least important, being merely the background parent who paid the bills—Mr. Parcher.

One subject was preoccupying both Mr. Parcher and William, their two views, though again founded upon one thought, had no real congeniality. The preoccupying subject was the imminence of Miss Pratt's departure. Neither Mr. Parcher nor William forgot it for an instant. No matter what else played upon the surface of their attention, each kept saying to himself underneath: "This is the last night—the last night! Miss Pratt is going away—going away tomorrow!"

The unuttered words advanced tragically toward the gate in the head of William at the same time that they moved contentedly away in the head of Mr. Parcher, for Mr. Parcher caught sight of his wife just then and went to join her as she sank wearily upon the front steps.

"Taking a rest for a minute?" he inquired. "By Georgs, we're both entitled to a good, long rest after tonight! If we could afford it we'd go away to a quiet little sanitarium in the hills somewhere, and"— His staring eyes followed the movements of a stately young form entering the gateway. "Look at it!" said Mr. Parcher in a whisper. "Just look at it!"

"Look at what?" asked his wife.

"That Baxter boy!" said Mr. Parcher as William passed on toward the dancers. "What's he think he's imitating—Henry Irving? Look at his walk!"

"He walks that way a good deal lately, I've noticed," said Mrs. Parcher in a tired voice. "So do Joe Bullitt and"—

"He didn't even come to say good evening to you," Mr. Parcher interrupted. "Talk about manners nowadays! These young"—

"He didn't see us."

"Well, we're used to that," said Mr. Parcher. "None of 'em sees us. They've worn holes in all the cane seated chairs, they've scuffed up the whole house, and I haven't been able to sit down anywhere downstairs for three months without sitting on some dam boy. But they don't even know we're alive! Well, thank the Lord, it's over—after tonight!" His voice became reflective. "That Baxter boy was the worst until he took to coming in the daytime when I was downtown. I couldn't have stood it if he'd kept on coming in the evening. If I'd had to listen to any more of his talking or singing either the embalmer or the lunatic asylum would have had me, sure! I see he's got hold of his daddy's dress suit again for tonight."

"Is it Mr. Baxter's dress suit?" Mrs. Parcher inquired. "How do you know?"

Mr. Parcher smiled. "How I happen to know is a secret," he said. "I forgot about that. His little sister, Jane, told me that Mrs. Baxter had hidden it, or something, so that Willie couldn't wear it, but I guess Jane wouldn't mind my telling you that she told me, especially as they're letting him use it again tonight. I suppose he feels grander'n the king o' Siam!"

"No," Mrs. Parcher returned thoughtfully, "I don't think he does just now." Her gaze was fixed upon the dancing platform, which most of the dancers were abandoning as the music fell away to an interval of silence. In the center of the platform there remained one group, consisting of Miss Pratt and five orators, and of the orators the most impassioned and gesticulative was William.

"They all seem to want to dance with her all the time," said Mrs. Parcher. "I heard her telling one of the boys half an hour ago that all she could give him was either the twenty-eighth regular dance or the sixteenth 'extra.'"

Nothing could have been more evident than William's difficulties. They continued to exist with equal obviousness when the group broke up in some confusion after a few minutes of animated discussion. Mr. Wallace Banks, that busy and executive youth, bearing Miss Pratt triumphantly off to the lemonade punch bowl, while William pursued Johnnie Watson and Joe Bullitt.

"Now you look here, Johnnie," William said vehemently, "and you listen too, Joe! You both got seven dances apiece with her, anyway, all on account of my not getting here early enough, and you got to"—

"It wasn't because of any such reason," young Mr. Watson protested." "I asked her for mine two days ago."

"Well, that wasn't fair, was it?" William cried. "Just because I never thought of sneaking in ahead like that, you go and"—

"Well, you ought to thought of it," Johnnie retorted, jerking his arm free of William's grasp. "I can't stand here gabbin' all night!" And he hurried away.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Miss Boks.

"JOE," William began, fastening more securely upon Mr. Bullitt —"Joe, I've done a good many favors for you, and"—

"I've got to see a man," Mr. Bullitt interrupted. "Lemme go, Silly Bill. There's somebody I got to see right away, before the next dance begins. I got to! Honest I have!"

William seized him passionately by the lapels of his coat. "Listen, Joe. For goodness' sake can't you listen a minute? You got to give me"—

"Honest, Bill," his friend expostulated, backing away as forcefully as possible. "I got to find a fellow that's here tonight and ask him about some thing important before"—

"Ye gods! Can't you wait a minute?" William cried, keeping his grip upon Joe's lapels. "You got to give me anyway two out of all your dances with her! You heard her tell me your self that she'd be willing if you or Johnnie or"—

"Well, I only got five or six with her and a couple extras. Johnnie's got seven. Why'n't you go after Johnnie? I bet he'd help you out, all right, if you kept after him. What you want to pester me for, Bill?"

William swallowed, and, increasing the affectionate desperation of his clutch upon Mr. Bullitt's lapels, "Joe," he began huskily—"Joe, if I'd got six reglar and two extras with Miss Pratt the last night here, and you got here late, and it wasn't your fault—I couldn't help being late, could I? I

The Hamilton Herald makes a good suggestion, that the Department of Militia hire some good newspaper man who can write clear English, to put the recent military orders in such shape that ordinary people can know what they mean. It also thinks that a condensation of the multitudinous food regulations would be helpful and most people will agree to both these suggestions.

Housekeepers who are anxious about their preserves for next winter may take comfort. The Food Board announces that there will be sufficient sugar in the Country for the preserving and canning season, and that the maximum fruit and vegetable crops that can be produced in this country will be taken care of, so far as the sugar supply is concerned. To make sure of this, however, strict conservation will be necessary in the meantime.

The Ontario exchange says, "With this year The Advocate enters upon its 31st year of publication, and although still in the best of health, its existence is now being threatened owing to its entire staff being ordered to the front within a few months." Another exchange asks the public to excuse its general appearance for they have already lost five men through enlistment, and the foreman who is now a boy of 16 years of age. The other day the Toronto police found a fellow offering to sell whisky at $8 a bottle, and getting his price. The memory of the editor of the Orillia Packet runs back to the time when a bottle of the same size was filled from draught for ten cents. Per Centra, quinine then sold at $5 or $6 an ounce, and once since has dropped as low as 25 cents. Unfortunately quinine is a most unsatisfactory substitute for bottled joy.

"BUD" sends the following clipping as a stop-gap: A man ran into a physician's office in St Joseph, Mo., the other day and said a man had swallowed a two-foot rule and was dying by inches. The doctor said that was nothing as he had a patient once who swallowed a thermometer and died by degrees. Two patients chipped in, one saying it reminded him of a fellow in Texas who swallowed a revolver and went off easy, and the other said he had a friend in Manitoba who drank a quart of applejack and died in good spirits.

BRUCE COUNTY HOSPITAL

A summary of the Annual Report of this Institution appears in another column of this week's Telescope.

The Dominion Government has set apart June 30th as a day of national humiliation and prayer.

A gentleman winked at a bright little boy on the Lewiston car the other day. The youngster tried to return the salute, but both eyes persisted in shutting. "Mamma," he finally said to the nice-looking woman by his side, "wink at that man."

Ontario motorists may now drive in twenty-six States in American Union without paying any extra license fee. Orders in council have been passed by the Government providing for reciprocity in auto licenses with Colorado and Nebraska. Under the reciprocity arrangement motorists from these States are permitted to stay in Ontario for thirty days without a license, in return for a similar privilege to Ontario motorists.

Pleasant To Take

"The ancients believed that kissing a pretty girl was a sure cure for headache," says an exchange. After all, there is nothing like the old-fashioned remedies.

Called Person Returns

One of the curious side results of the war is seen in the return of colored waiters to hotels in New York and other big northern cities. Time was when most of the large hotels, not only in the Northern States but in Canada as well had colored waiters. During the last 10 years or so these had been steadily disappearing, but they are coming back now following upon the withdrawal of European waiters to fight in the armies of their respective countries. Not only are negros coming back as waiters, but they are, in Canada, appearing as train hands and, in Toronto, as motormen or conductors on the street railway.

The man that has a thing to sell,
And goes and whispers down a well
Is not so apt to collar the dollars
As he that climbs a tree and hollers.

A Problem For The Editor

To the Editor of the Telescope:—"Would you please tell me the best way to take dirt out of a gasoline tank in an automobile?" We must say that we have tried various ways and one at least was most successful. Turn the car over completely up side down, crawl into the opening at the top of the tank (which will then be at the bottom) and with a whisk thoroughly dust the interior. Another way is to take a vacuum cleaner of small size and hold it over the tank. If one day's operation is not a success keep it up till you are tired.

May Bar Dandelion Wine

Home brewers of dandelion wine are liable to be charged with a breach of the Ontario Temperance Act, says License Inspector J. E. Keenleyside, of London. While the wine, when first made is not strong, it is stated that age gives it the kick so much appreciated. Mr. Keenleyside says it has been known to possess as high as 20 to 50 per cent proof spirits, and as the limit is 2½ per cent. the inspector asserts this and all similar drinks which test over the 2½ per cent are banned. There is no special reference to these home-made wines, but they are covered by the Act, the inspector interprets.

But kiss her, boy; it is your right."

May Abolish Exams.

Hon. Dr. Cody, the newly appointed Minister of Education, bids fair to win exceeding popularity with boys and girls. It is said he is not in favor of "exams," and may order their abandonment. He holds that the "nightmare of examinations" which perennially casts a gloom over the school child should be done away with and that examinations should be mollified. A truer result of the child's ability can be formed he thinks, by taking the average work of the term during which minor tests will, of course, be set, than by the imposing of examinations which frighten many of the children and whose examiners aim rather to find out what the child does not know rather than that what he does.—Stratford Herald.

A Tragic Event

It was a town girl—and the same sad story that, alas, has often been told, and checkered many a young life which had its beginning in sunshine, surrounded by luxury and the wealth of the world. Her eyes were now wild and staring, her face was flushed and her hands were nervously working. She was a deeply troubled and injured woman and we hear her saying: "Oh, cruel one, you have injured the very foundation of my being! Day by day you have tortured me, and yet I could not bear to give you up. When we first met, how your ease and polish attracted me! When you became my own, how my friends envied me. But your understanding is too small for my large soul. You are opposed to my advancing myself. You have injured my standing in society. If we had never met I might have walked in peace. So now begone! We part forever!" There was a moment's convulsive breathing, a gritting of teeth and a sharp sigh. It was all over. By a supreme effort she had pulled off her new shoe.

Misses Cow-Bell Lullaby

The old adage that what is food for one is poison for another is well illustrated by an incident which came to our attention this week. A Gibson St. citizen made such a fuss about his neighbor's cow-bell keeping him awake at night that the neighbor had it removed from his co-bossy so that the irate one's slumbers might be undisturbed. Another indignant neighbor now appears in the offing with the complaint that he misses the merry tinkle of the bell around mid-night. It soothed his tired nerves and lulled him to blissful repose. But now he can't sleep, so he says and he spends hours trying to woo Morpheus, alas in vain. Insomnia is making him thin. He is down to 180 lbs. already. He claims that if the owner of the bell has a heart he will allow it to tinkle as of yore and spare him the horror of more sleepless nights.

A Life Well Spent.

The death took place at Mildmay on Friday, June 7th, of Miss Alice Berry, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Berry, aged 43 years and 2 months. Miss Berry had been poorly all winter but got up and dressed herself every day until Thursday last. On Friday morning she secured release from suffering, passing peacefully away. At the age of fifteen her mother lost her eyesight so that the care of the home and the raising of three small brothers fell on her and an older sister. She was one who tried to make her life count for good in the world. Her church work was not confined to the Methodist body. For seven years she was a teacher in the Presbyterian Sabbath School. She was a worker in both church and home as one minister emphasized at her funeral, and in church, home, and community she was a general favorite. Miss Berry was a niece of Mr. Henry Williams of Walkerton and a cousin of Mrs. Albert Inglis. The funeral was conducted on Sunday by Rev. Messrs Patterson and Guild.

Dr. R. J. Wilson of Palmerston was in town Tuesday.

Mart. Taggart of town has been transferred to St. Marys Junction as relieving operator.

Saw Air Raid.

Pte. Bert Hoover writes his father from England that he is enjoying his first leave in Old London. He witnessed a German air raid in the Metropolis. Bert stuck to the street throughout the raid. He saw one man struck on the head with a flying bit of shrapnel. He has been somewhat crippled with rheumatism since landing in England but has been able to stay with the training so far.

Removing To London

Mr. John Ward, who conducted the Walker House for a number of years, and since prohibition has conducted a grocery and butcher shop, is closing up his business and removing to London where he purposes running a grocery. Mr. Ward was born at St. Marys and resided for a number of years at Lucan near London where he was in the cattle business as he is going back to the section where he has spent most of his life. We wish him every success in his new undertaking.

Patterson—Crampsin

A very pretty wedding was solemnized on Wednesday, May 22, at high noon at the home of Mr and Mrs. Abe Crampsin, Griswold, Man., when their eldest daughter Alberta Mae, granddaughter of Mrs. Pearl Stevens, Walkerton, was united in marriage to Mr. George T. Patterson son of Mr. and Mrs. G. Patterson, Griswold. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Royle. The bride entered the drawing room on the arm of her father to the strains of Mendelssohns wedding march, played by Miss Mildred Stevens, of Hartney, Man., cousin of the bride. The bride was daintily attired in a gown of white silk crepe de chene. Her veil of tulle was caught with a wreath of orange blossoms and carried a bouquet of bridal roses and maiden hair fern. Both bride and groom were unattended. After the ceremony a buffet luncheon was served to about forty guests. Later Mr. and Mrs. Patterson left for Winnipeg, midst showers of confetti and good wishes, where a short honey moon was spent. The bride travelled in a suit of Russian Green Gabardine. The coat opened over a blouse of shell pink crepe de chine. Her hat was a becoming model of white georgette crepe. The bride and groom were the recipients of many handsome presents which showed the esteem both held in the community.

CARING FOR THE KIDDIES

Children's Aid Society Is Doing A Noble Work And Making Good Citizens of To-Morrow

Through the efforts of the live and aggressive Inspector of the Children's Aid Society, the people of Bruce are being brought more closely in touch with a most important work in our midst and are beginning to appreciate the importance of this work to the community and the wonderful possibilities for good.

It is now nearly thirty years ago that Mr. J. J. Kelso, at that time a journalist on a big Canadian daily, felt the great need of something to be done for the destitute and dependent children of his country. He appealed to the government and secured its help and support. The Children's Aid Society was founded, and from a small beginning it has grown to a mighty organization that stretches over the whole of Canada.

Its aim is to place every homeless child, not in an institution, but in a Christian foster home. Many children left orphans, with no near relatives in a position to rear them, are, thru the ministrations of the Children's Aid Society, placed in homes where they are loved and cared for tenderly and enabled to grow up into useful men and women. Many a child living in an atmosphere of evil and surrounded by influences of vice and wrong has been removed to a home of righteousness and purity.

The society does not seek or desire to break up families. It believes that the very best guardians of a child are its own father and mother, but it seeks to urge and warn careless and neglectful parents to be more careful of the precious lives entrusted to their care and to make them realize their responsibilities. Only in cases where repeated and long-extended warnings have been unavailing, where human nature has sunk so low that parental instinct seems dead, is the child taken from its home.

Finding Foster Homes

The greatest care is exercised to see that the foster home to which a child is sent is a suitable one. Children born in the Roman Catholic faith are sent to Roman Catholic foster homes, and Protestant children to Protestant foster homes. The child is visited at frequent intervals by an officer of the society, and if he or she does not appear to be happy or well, investigation is made, and if necessary the child is removed. This, however, very rarely happens. The records of the society show that less than one per cent of the foster homes prove unsuitable for the children placed therein.

The society has at its head offices in Toronto the most wonderful and comprehensive filing system by which at almost a moment's notice the particulars regarding any of its children can be ascertained. Many of these records are of the most absorbing interest. For instance, one draws out "Folio 109," and finds it to contain a complete record of Mary Warren, the date of her birth, her parents' nationality, etc.

How Mary Was Saved

Mary was the child of small farmers living a few miles out of a large Canadian city. Her mother was scarcely fit to be called by that sacred name. Drink and vice had dragged her down to the lowest depths. Her step-father had a mania for cruelly ill-treating and abusing her.

A kind-hearted neighbor reported the case to the Children's Aid Society, and the superintendent at once investigated. The condition of the little girl was indescribable. She was practically destitute of clothing. Her fragile, ill-nourished little body bore many marks of her parent's brutality. She was timid, wild-eyed and, the more than twelve years old, as ignorant as any little heathen.

The law promptly took charge of the parents, and the Children's Aid Society looked after Mary. She was placed in an industrial school for girls (for in this case the child was too old and not sufficiently attractive in appearance for a foster home to be found for her), and after a few years she developed into a useful, well-trained domestic. In the folio are to be found letters from the different employers she had been with, and all speak highly of her honesty, capability and all-round satisfactoriness.

There is also a record of Mary's marriage, and right here comes a touch of romance, for Mary has been married to the son of the old farm neighbor who first brought her to the attention of the Children's Aid Society. There is a photo of the happy bridal couple. Then towards the end of the folio are letters from Mary written to the superintendent since her marriage. Such bright, cheerful letters! Telling of her happy married life, of her husband's success in business, and there are photos of her three bonny bouncing children, for tho at the age of 21 the society ceases to have any legal claim upon any of its wards, there is often a bond of friendship and gratitude between the two that lasts a lifetime. And Mary Warren's story is only one of thousands.

LIEUT. VIC. McKECHNIE

Tells of the Unsurpassed Beauties of Rural England In Letter to the Folks At Home

Lieut. Victor McKechnie, who is at present convalescing from trench fever in an English military hospital writes interestingly of sights and scenes in beautiful Derbyshire:—

Matlock Baths
Derbyshire, Eng.
May 15, 1918.

Dear Home Ones:—

The past week has been splendid, there was no rain and so I have been out of the hospital every day. The Canadian Red Cross in London have cars for the use of Canadian hospitals and Wednesday and Thursday some of us used them, both trips were perfect. We went away from the city into the parks and country. Each time we had tea in a cool comfortable place and returned in the evening and do believe the majority of the people in Canada do not even begin to realize the great work the C. R. C. are carrying on. Every Canadian in hospitals is visited by a Canadian worker, which means, to use a soldiers' phrase(one whole big bunch.) Mrs. McLaren, whose husband is Director of Medical Services for Canada, and her sister came to see us. They send us books, the home papers, flowers etc. Then they have a list of hundreds of homes everywhere through the British Isles where those on the way to recovery are royally welcome during the term of leave granted, this, and a great deal more in addition to the wonderful work of caring for the sick and wounded. There is not a single Canadian over here who can be too thankful or loud in their praise of this work. Friday I did some shopping and had a late pass. A late pass means ten and you are up on the carpet with both feet if you have to ring the bell to get in after ten. Saturday four of us, all Canadians, were sent up here from London. This hospital is for Canadian Officers and there are about 150 here. Matlock Baths although but a village is a noted place in England. It is "pocket in the hills" but a very deep pocket. We are in what was the Royal Hotel. I was told that for years before the war it was taken annually by the celebrated Vanderbilt family of New York for themselves and friends during the summer seasons. There are several acres here where the springs are, the water of which was sold for three pence a glass. There are all kinds of baths on the premises, Turkish, Thermal steam, Russian, Spray, Electrical and others as well as the Tub. A swimming bath is quite near which is fed continually by the hill springs summer and winter having a fixed natural temperature of [illegible]. I have heard several, who have visited extensively say that they [illegible] ever seen anything like the scenery. It is marvellous. The hills are over 200 ft. high and very steep and beautifully covered with green foliage and unbroken by any field or habitation. The Royal is on a miniature height. Before us are the few houses comprising the village and towering above us on the highest point on the highest hill is a great old Watch Tower. We were up there last evening and after climbing up the spiral stairway beheld a view I shall never forget. For miles and miles the numerous farms, green hills, and forests and as the sun went down, a faint hazy mist seemed to mark the dim horizon "Eternity." All around the birds were singing. I heard dozens of cuckoos and many different wild birds calling. The hotel is a great immense place wonderfully fitted up and has terraces, old oak garden bowers, gardens, tennis courts, winding paths, hedges, and within the palisade is the little village chapel, ivy covered and crumbling with age and with a single chime (which echoes from hill to hill like some living but immortal voice.) The people in the neighbourhood do everything they can possibly do for the patients. Here and there are a score of splendid trips. There is also a river and boats, fishpond with many different kinds of fish, an aviary with a great number of birds. The air is wonderfully bracing. There are very few restrictions and no duties except about twenty minutes P. T. daily. We are sent here for a change and rest, medicine and treatment are generally left behind. I will be here for a month and then have three weeks leave which I intend to spend in the Highlands of Scotland.

Victor.

Gilchrist—Symon—That whereas the Dominion Government, their commissions, food and other controllers, in the passing of the legislation in the regulating or in fixing the prices of commodities, advise and consult with the experts of the respective industries to be affected, therefore it is expedient that the farmers be forthwith equipped with the ablest experts in every branch of their industry, in order to aid the Government, their commissions or controllers in carrying out their necessary wartime legislation or regulation.

Be it therefore resolved that this Council approve of the holding of a convention at some centrally located point in the Province of Ontario of representatives from all the Councils of the rural municipalities, as representing the farming community, for the purpose of discussing and, if deemed advisable, of creating an organization that will have at its disposal the ablest men possible, whose duty it will be to protect the interests of the farmers in all matters affecting them whether it be legislation, transportation, arbitrary fixing of prices or otherwise, also to aid all legitimate farmers organizations in all their aims; that the cost of such organization and its undertakings could well be apportioned among the various rural municipalities of the province, according to their respective assessments; and it is suggested that such organization might be composed of the Presidents of all legitimate farmers' organizations in the province and of one representative from each rural municipality, to be appointed annually by the Council of each thereof.—Carried.

Bears In Bruce.

Roy Sayles, editor of the Port Elgin Times, had a real honest-to-goodness bear story in last week's paper. He says:-Last week, in connection with the establishment of Registration places we had to visit the peninsula. On our way back from Tobermory, just eight miles this side, and just at three in the afternoon, we had passed over a good sized rattlesnake, had slackened the speed of our car because a couple of woodchucks were scampering along in front when suddenly turning a sharp corner, there squatting in the centre of the road, was a fine, big shaggy, black bear, not forty feet from us. Naturally we just slammed on the emergency brake, and expected bruin would perhaps first charge at a tire, tear a hole in it, then deal with us later. But he did neither. He just shook his head and scampered off in the bush, while we, what did we do? We put on full steam ahead. After a short distance we collected our thoughts, stopped the car and figured it out. Snakes! woodchucks! bears! Only for the fact that we had been hobnobbing with Reeve Phil Forbes, Reeve Whit Moore, Dr. Hacking and other celebrities we certainly would have believed there was something wrong with the editor. But then wasn't. We saw the bear.

Fatal Accident In Teeswater

The residents of the village were stunned this evening (Wednesday) when it became known that a very bad accident had happened at the station about half past five, when Mr. Nelson Rivers was fatally hurt. He was busy unloading sand for foundry castings from a car when the freight came in. The train men shouted to him that he would have to move forward to let the train pass. He climbed onto the load, took the line to do so, but the horses backed a little and the train struck the load throwing Mr. Rivers forward under the feet of the horses. The powerful team he was driving became frightened and he was badly trampled with their feet. Although everything possible was done for the sufferer, medical aid was of no avail he was conscious until the end which came about two hours after the accident. Mr. Rivers was born in Carrick 50 years ago. In 1893 he was married in Kincardine and moved to Teeswater about 20 years ago. RUPTURE IS CURABLE

Results Not Influenced by Age or Length of Time Standing, Says Expert

Rupture is not a tear or breach in the abdominal wall, as commonly supposed, but it is a stretching or dilation of a natural opening, as a J. Y. Egan of Toronto, the noted rupture appliance specialist who will visit Walkerton, Hartley House, Thursday afternoon and night Friday all day and night—14 days only—June 27th and 28th.

The "Curatus" as now used and approved will not only retain any case of rupture perfectly affording immediate and complete comfort, but is intended to assist nature to close the opening in the shortest time known. This appliance has received highest awards wherever shown, producing results without harmful injections or other aids. Mr. Egan has testimonials from our own section for inspection. If interested, call; he will be pleased to show you same without charge. See his advertisement.

Hepworth Gas Prospect's Good

The Northern Gas & Gasoline Co., Ltd., have again commenced drilling after a delay of ten days waiting for a shipping of casing. The well was ceased Friday last and drilling is going on very satisfactorily. The casing used is manufactured in Pittsburg especially for high pressure gas wells, and is tested to a pressure of 750 pounds to the square inch. The drill is now down 500 feet, working in the Red Medina Shale, and will likely reach the Hudson River Formation by the latter part of the week. From information gained from the drillers the prospects are exceptionally good and it is their opinion that when the Trenton formation is pierced to the proper depth a good supply of gas will be obtained.

Kloepfer—Hinsperger

A quiet wedding took place in the Sacred Heart Church here on Thursday morning of last week, when Miss Isabel Hinsperger, youngest daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Ferdinand Hinsperger, was united in marriage to Mr. Jos. Kloepfer, a prosperous blacksmith of Gagetown, Mich. Rev. A. C. Montag conducted the ceremony in the presence of a very few immediate friends of the contracting parties. After the ceremony the happy young couple left by motor to spend a day with Mr. Kloepfer's parents near Chepstow, after which they motored to Gagetown. Mr. Kloepfer, who is an expert mechanic has been conscripted by the U. S. government to help build battleships and will leave this week for California to take up his new occupation. His bride was a very popular lady here, and the best wishes of her numerous friends here follow her to her distant home.—Mildmay Gazette.

Pace—McBeath

A very interesting event happened at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John McBeath, 4th con. Elderslie, on the evening of June 5th, when their second daughter, Isabel G., was united in marriage to John A. Pace, of Bruce Tp., in the presence of about seventy guests, relatives and friends of the contracting parties. At 7 o'clock the handsome bridegroom took his place under a beautiful arch of evergreen decorated and interwoven with bridal roses, and awaited the coming of the bride. To the sweet strains of Lohengrin played by Miss Annie E. McBeath sister of the bride, the sweet and winsome young bride appeared leaning on the arm of her father, attired in a gown of white brocaded chiffon and carrying a beautiful bouquet of carnations and maiden hair fern. With the exception of little Rachel Pollock, niece of the groom, who acted as flower girl, the young couple were unattended. The bride looked beautiful as she took her place beside the groom and very modestly plighted her troth to the young man of her choice. The ceremony was conducted by her pastor, Rev. G. C. Little, B. A. After the trying ordeal which made the happy couple one, and the usual congratulations were over, the guests were invited to the spacious dining room where a dainty wedding supper was served by the hostess, Mrs. McBeath and her assistants. The tables were beautifully decorated for the occasion. The groom's gift to the bride was a pearl necklace, and to the little flower girl a gold brooch. The numerous gifts included many useful and costly articles, also a number of substantial cheques, one of which was from the bride's mother for $300. The genial host and hostess gave their guests a very enjoyable time. Those present were from Owen Sound, Aberdour, Underwood, Paisley, Gresham, Chesley and other points. The young couple will reside on the groom's farm, 8th con. Bruce, where they will be at home to their many friends after June 25th.

It's a good thing that animals that sold for over $2,000 at the stock sale was not for beef purposes. Just figure the price of a flank steak when the dealer got through trimming up such a critter, and getting it ready for market. Even ox-tail soup would be worth about $200 a plate.

DUNKELD

A veteran of Passchendaele, giving his address as Toronto, canvassed the burg on Monday as representative of The Ladies Home Journal and a Girls' Magazine and the fact that the stranger wore a Service badge as well as some scars of the fight was sufficient to expel any doubt as to the reliability of the Hero and assured him of a warm welcome and a generous response among the natives here.

Hence, we imagine Frank's dame friends shall be kept busy from now on getting "wised up" to his latest military promotions for a quick climb such as we here cite is likely to be quickly followed by higher honors.

Mr. I. Abell is as well as ever again after his long siege of illness.

Owing to the decline in the hog market last week most of the locals engaged in that sort of production deemed it advisable to deliver to market all porkers anywhere near the standard weight, thus showing how some producers prefer accepting a fair renumeration rather than travel under the term of a war-time profiteer.

EDEN GROVE

The Grand Trunk Agent lost his pocket book containing some ninety odd bucks last Saturday. Tears gathered in his eyes and rolling down his cheeks splashed about his feet. Great were his groans and lamentations. It is none of your business where he found it.

A certain gentleman in our community was advised to be sure and bring home a loaf of bread with him or he'd go dinnerless. To make deadly sure he bought it immediately he arrived in the city and left it on the middle of the sidewalk so that on his way home there would be no possible chance of his overlooking it. Alas and alack he arrived home breathless and breadless.

Patrick Desmond and Neil Thompson were training last week for a road race. They drove their horse, we are informed, out to old Ballaham farm where they were hired to cut down the primeval forest. Unhitching the quadruped they turned it loose into Lee Bedbeck's hay field for a free feed while they imitated our forefathers in clearing the land. While they sweated and heaved (Oh dear) the beast rambled homeward and left the two stalwart pioneers to get home the best they could. Next morning they were forced to repeat the exercise. Moral—the horse is an intelligent animal but man—.

The sale at Alex McKeeman's residence on Monday afternoon was well attended and prices very fair. Bill Desmond intends in future to fold up like a jackknife and lay on a short bed.

The funeral took place at the Evangelical Church Tuesday afternoon at Clifford. He leaves to mourn, his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Wolfe of Clifford and three brothers and two sisters and a host of relatives.

Her early death will be a distinct loss not only to her family but the community at large. Deceased was born in the township of N. Dumfries, County of Waterloo, and died at her home at Middleport Monday, June 10th. The funeral services were in charge of Rev. Mr. Down at the house. Finally, I decided to try 'Fruit-a-tives'". Before I had used half a box, I noticed an improvement; the pain was not so severe, and the swelling started to go down.

I continued taking this fruit medicine, improving all the time, and now I can walk about two miles and do light chores about the place".

Forethought and Good Judgment Used

Travellers show preference for Scenic Route; Busy Men use Night Trains

Nowadays, forethought, and a lively sense of public appreciation play an important part in the construction of a railroad. The Canadian Northern made a happy choice in the selection of its route between Toronto and Ottawa: skirting the shoreline of Lake Ontario and the Bay of Quinte; over the heights of land between Napanee and Sydenham; and through Rideau Lakes region, adds zest to the daytime journey in Spring or Summer. Comfortable day and night trains, stopping at principal intermediate stations, have made the route very popular.

A Tale of Youth and Summer Time and the Baxter Family, Especially William

By

BOOTH TARKINGTON

Copyright, 1916, 1916, by Metropolitan Magazine.

wasn't my fault it was late. I guess was it? Well, if I was in your place I wouldn't act the way you and Johnnie do—not in a thousand years I wouldn't! I'd say: 'You want a couple o' my dances with Miss Pratt, ole man? Why, certainly!'"—

"Yes, you would!" was the cynical comment of Mr. Bullitt, whose averted face and reluctant shoulders indicated a strong desire to conclude the interview. "Tonight especially!" he added

"Look here, Joe," said William desperately, "don't you realize that this is the very last night Miss Pratt's going to be in this town?"

"You bet I do!" These words, though vehement, were inaudible, being formed in the mind of Mr. Bullitt, but, for diplomatic reasons, not projected upon the air by his vocal organs.

William continued, "Joe, you and I have been friends ever since you and I were boys." He spoke with emotion, but Joe had no appearance of being favorably impressed. "And when I look back," said William, "I expect I've done more favors for you than I ever have for any oth"—

But Mr. Bullitt briskly interrupted this appealing reminiscence. "Listen here, Silly Bill," he said, becoming at once friendly and encouraging—"Bill, there's other girls here you can get dances with. There's one or two of 'em sittin' around in the yard. You can have a bully time even if you did come late." And, with the air of discharging happily all the obligations of which William had reminded him, he added, "I'll tell you that much, Bill!"

"Joe, you got to give me anyway one dance"—

"Look!" said Mr. Bullitt eagerly. "Look, sittin' yonder, over under that tree all by herself! That's a visiting girl named Miss Boke. She's visiting some old uncle or something she's got living here, and I bet you could"—

"Joe, you got to"—

"I bet that Miss Boke's a good dancer, Bill," Joe continued warmly. "May Parcher says so. She was trying to get me to dance with her myself, but I couldn't for I would of. Honest, Bill I would of! Bill if I was you I'd sail right in there before anybody else got a start, and I'd"—

"Ole man," said William gently, "you remember the time Miss Pratt and I had an engagement to go walkin', and you wouldn't of seen her for a week on account of your aunt dyin' in Kansas City if I hadn't let you go along with us? Ole man, if you"—

But the music sounded for the next dance, and Joe felt that it was indeed time to end this uncomfortable conversation. "I got to go, Bill," he said. "I got to!"

"Wait just one minute," William implored. "I want to say just this: If"—

"Here!" exclaimed Mr. Bullitt. "I got to go!"

"I know it. That's why"—

Heedless of remonstrance, Joe wrenched himself free, for it would have taken a powerful and ruthless man to detain him longer. "What you take me for?" he demanded indignantly. "I got this with Miss Pratt!"

And, evading a hand which still sought to clutch him, he departed hotly.

Mr. Parcher's voice expressed wonder a little later as he recommended his wife to turn her gaze in the direction of "that Baxter boy" again. "Just look at him!" said Mr. Parcher. "His face has got more genuine idiocy in it than I've seen around here yet, and God knows I've been seeing some miracles in that line this summer!"

"He's looking at Lola Pratt," said Mrs. Parcher.

"Don't you suppose I can see that?" Mr. Parcher returned, with some irritation. "That's what's the trouble with him. Why don't he quit looking at her?"

"I think probably he feels bad because she's dancing with one of the other boys," said his wife mildly.

"Then why can't he dance with somebody else himself," Mr. Parcher inquired testily, "instead of standing around like a calf looking out of the butchers wagon? By George, he looks as if he was just going to moo!"

"Of course he ought to be dancing with somebody," Mrs. Parcher remarked thoughtfully. "There are one or two more girls than boys here, and he's the only boy not dancing. I believe I'll"— And, not stopping to complete the sentence, she rose and walked across the interval of grass to William. "Good evening, William," she said pleasantly. "Don't you want to dance?"

"Ma'am!" said William blankly, and the eyes he turned upon her were glassy with anxiety.

"Don't you want to dance?" Mrs. Parcher repeated. "Have you looked around for a girl without a partner?"

"Girl?" he echoed in a tonetof feeble inquiry.

She smiled and nodded, taking his arm. "You come with me!" she said. "I'll fix you up."

William suffered her to conduct him across the yard. Intensely preoccupied with what he meant to do as soon as the music paused, he was somewhat hazy, but when he perceived that he was being led in the direction of a girl sitting solitary under one of the maple trees the sudden shock of fear aroused his faculties.

"What—where"— he stammered, balking and seeking to detach himself from his hostess.

"What is it?" she asked.

"I got—I got to"— William began uneasily. "I got to"—

His purpose was to execute himself on the ground that he had to find a man and tell him something important before the next dance, for in the confusion of the moment his powers refused him greater originality. But the vital part of his intended excuse remained unspoken, being disregarded and cut short, as millions of other masculine diplomacies have been throughout the centuries by the decisive action of ladies.

Miss Boke had been sitting under the maple tree for a long time—so long, indeed, that she was acquiring a profound distaste for forestry and even for maple syrup. In fact, her state of mind was as desperate in its way as William's. And when a hostess leads a youth in almost perfectly fitting conventional black toward a girl who has been sitting alone through dance after dance that girl knows what that youth is going to have to do.

It must be confessed for Miss Boke that her eyes had been upon William from the moment Mrs. Parcher addressed him. She sprang to her feet and met Mrs. Parcher more than halfway.

"Oh, Mrs. Parcher!" she called, coming forward.

"I got"— the panic stricken William again hastily began. "I got to"—

"Oh, Mrs. Parcher," cried Miss Boke, "I've been so worried! There's a candle in that Japanese antern just overhead, and I think it is going out."

"I'll run and get a fresh one in a minute," said Mrs. Parcher, smiling benevolently and retaining William's arm with a little difficulty. "We were just coming to find you. I've brought"—

"I got to—I got to find a m"— William made a last stricken effort.

"Miss Boke, this is Mr. Baxter," said Mrs. Parcher, and she added, with what seemed to William hideous garrulity: "He and you both came late, dear, and he hasn't any dances engaged either. So run and dance and have a nice time together."

The full horror of his position was revealed to William in the relieved, confident, proprietor's smile of Miss Boke, for William lived by a code from which no previous experience had taught him any means of escape. Mrs. Parcher had made the statement, so needless and so ruinous, that he had no engagements, and in his dismay he had been unable to deny this fatal truth. He had been obliged to let it stand.

He had to give form to the fatal invitation. "Ma'am this dance 'thyou'" he muttered dogredly.

"Verry pleased to!" Miss Boke responded; whereupon they walked in silence to the platform, stepped upon its surface and embraced.

They made a false start, then another. They stood swaying to catch the time, then made another. After that they tried again and were saved from a fall only by spasmodic and noticeable contortions.

Miss Boke laughed tolerantly, as if forgiving William for his awkwardness, and his hot heart grew hotter with that injustice. A coarse chuckle, a half suppressed snort, assailed William's scarlet ear, and from the corner of his eye he caught a glimpse of Joe Bullitt gliding by, subdued, while over Joe's detested shoulder could be seen the adorable and piquant face of the one girl, also suffused.

"Dogone it!" William panted.

"Oh, you mustn't be discouraged with yourself," said Miss Boke genially. "I've met lots of Men that had trouble to get started and turned out to be right good dancers, after all. It seems to me we're kind of working against each other. I'll tell you, you kind of let me do the guiding and I'll get you going fine. Now! One, two, one, two! There!"

William ceased to struggle for dominance, and their efforts to "get started" were at once successful. He had a helpless feeling, fully warranted by the circumstances. He soon became aware that Miss Boke's powerful "guiding" was observed by the public, for after one collision, more severe than others, a low voice hissed in his ear:

"She won't hurt you much, Silly Bill. She's only in jun!"

This voice belonged to the dancer with whom he had just been in painful contact, Johnnie Watson.

"I just love dancing," said Miss Boke serenely. "Don't you, Mr. Baxter?"

"What?" he gulped. "Yah."

"It's lovely," she murmured. "I hope they don't play 'Home, Sweet, Home' very early at parties in this town. I could keep on like this all night!"

CHAPTER XIX.
Marooned.

TO the grasping William it seemed that she already had kept on like this all night, and he expressed himself in one great, frank, agonized moan of relief when the music stopped. "I sh' think musicians'd be dead!" he said as he wiped his brow. And, then discovering that May Parcher stood at his elbow, he spoke hastily to her. "M'ar' the next 'thyou'"

But Miss Parcher had begun to applaud the musicians for an encore. She shook her head. "Next's the third extra," she said. "And, anyhow, this one's going to be encored now. You can have the twenty-second if there is any."

William threw a wild glance about him, looking for other girls, but the tireless orchestra began to play the encore, and Miss Boke, who had been applauding, instantly put herself upon his bosom. "Come on!" she cried. "Don't let's miss a second of it. It's just glorious!"

When the encore was finished she seized William's arm and, mentioning that she'd left her fan upon the chair under the maple tree, added: "Come on! Let's go get it quick!"

Under the maple tree she fanned herself and talked of her love for dancing until the music sounded again. "Come on!" she cried then. "Don't let's miss a second of it! It's just glorious!"

And, grasping his arm, she propelled him toward the platform with a merry little rush.

So passed five dances—long, long dances.

Likewise five encores—long encores.

After each dance Miss Boke conducted him back to the maple tree, aloof from the general throng, and William found the intermissions almost equal to his martyrdom upon the platform. But, as there was a barely perceptible balance in their favor, he collected some fragments of his broken spirit when Miss Boke would have borne him to the platform for the sixth time and begged to "sit this one out," alleging that he had "kind of turned his ankle or something," he believed.

The cordial girl at once placed him upon the chair and gallantly procured another for herself. In her solicitude she sat close to him, looking fondly at his face, while William, though now and then rubbing his ankle for plausibility's sake, gazed at the platform with an expression which Gustave Dore would gratefully have found suggestive. Upon the many colored platform the ineffable One drifted to and fro, back and forth, her little blond head, in a golden net, glinting here and there like a bit of tinsel blowing across a flower garden.

And when that dance and its encore were over she went to lean against a tree, while Wallace Banks fanned her, but she was so busy with Wallace that she did not notice William, though she passed near enough to waft a breath of violet scent to his wan nose. A fragment of her silver speech tinkled in his ear:

"Oh, Wallie Banks, bid pid n'ant have Bruvva Josie-Joe's dance 'fess Joe say so! Lola mus' be fair. Wallie mustn't"—

"That's that Miss Pratt," observed Miss Boke, following William's gaze with some interest. "You met her yet?"

"Yeh," said William.

"She's been visiting here all summer," Miss Boke informed him. "I was at a little tea this afternoon, and some of the girls said this Miss Pratt said she'd never dream of getting engaged to any man that didn't have $750,000. I don't know if it's true or not, but I expect so. Anyway, they said they heard her say so."

William lifted his right hand from his ankle and passed it time after time across his damp forehead. He did not believe that Miss Pratt could have expressed herself in so mercenary a manner, but if she had—well, one fact in British history had so impressed him that he remembered it even after examination: William Pitt, the younger, had been prime minister of England at twenty-one. Undoubtedly Miss Boke's bit of gossip added somewhat to the already sufficient anxieties of William's evening.

"Up at the lake," Miss Boke chattered on, "we got to use the hotel dining room for the hops. It's a floor a good deal like this floor is tonight—just about oily enough, and as nice a floor as I ever danced on. We have awf'ly good times up at the lake. 'Course there aren't so many Men up there like there are here tonight, and I must say I am glad to get a chance to dance with a Man again! I told you you'd dance all right once we got started, and look at the way it's turned out! Our steps just suit exactly! If I must say it, I could scarcely think of anybody I ever met I'd rather dance with. When anybody's step suits in with mine that way, why, I love to dance straight through an evening with one person, the way we're doing."

"Yes," William reflected, "it had to be me!" With all the crowd to choose from, Mrs. Parcher had to go and pick on him! All, all the others went about free as air, flitting from girl to girl—girls that danced like girls! All, all except William danced with Miss Pratt

When the Kaiser started the war in August, 1914, he had an army of 2,800,000 in actual operation. One year later his army had grown to 4,800,000. By August, 1916, the German Army numbered 6,800,000. That was high water mark. In August 1917, the approximate size of the German Army was 6,000,000, and now it is about 700,000 fewer than that. The German Government stopped publishing its casualty lists last June, at which time the dead numbered 1,105,760, prisoners and missing 591,966, and the wounded 2,825,581—a total of 4,523,307. Waste Paper For Fuel

Waste paper is being used as fuel by some women who devise every way possible to cut down their coal bills. They take old newspapers, wrapping paper, cardboard, or any other old waste paper, and tear it up into small pieces and place in a watertight receptacle. Boiling water is then poured over it, and it is left until the mass becomes soft, usually taking about twelve hours. This mass is then made into little balls about four inches in diameter, which are set into the sun to dry, or may be dried in an oven. When thoroughly dry, these balls are ready for use. They catch fire quickly and burn slowly, and have been found a very satisfactory substitute for coal.

Motorists Have Right of Way

The Municipal World gives particulars of a case of interest to owners of automobiles. It says a horse-drawn vehicle must turn to the right of a beaten path or roadway and permit a motor car coming from behind to pass. Failure to do so makes the driver of the former vehicle guilty of negligence in the opinion of a jury composed largely of farmers at Woodstock. This verdict was reached after a trial lasting three days. Miss Florence Reid filed suit against Lant Stevens, asking $5,000 damages for personal injuries received in a runaway, caused, as she averred, when Stevens drove his car into her buggy when she ignored the repeated signals to turn out and give part of the road. As Stevens drove past the buggy the car collided with the wheels of the former vehicle, the crash frightening the horse, which ran away, throwing the occupants of the buggy out. Mrs. Reid received injuries which she claims are permanent. After a hard fought trial the jury decided in favor of the defendant, claiming that the plaintiff was negligent in not surrendering one-half of the road. The decision establishes an important precedent, and one that will be of interest to every driver whether of a motor car or a horse drawn vehicle.

The season has arrived when babies begin to drink fly poison and roll in sticky fly paper, in intervals of falling into carelessly placed tubs of water. Families with babies have no business using fly poison. Little legs are active, little hands reach for everything and little mouths think the world was made to taste. Fly traps and sticky paper are safe, and they will do as much as poison in eradicating flies. The baby who knocks down a fly trap does no damage, if he experiments with the sticky paper he is only fit for the bath tub. But the baby who drinks fly poison seldom lives to profit by the experience.

Some complaint has come regarding the giving of half the road in case of an automobile coming up behind a team. The parties claim that when they come up behind a fellow with a team he stubbornly refuses to give any of the road, no matter if there is plenty of room to turn out. Now the law recognizes the right of both the man with the team and the man with the auto and these rights should be respected. There are plenty of men who are running autos who should be driving oxen and vice versa, but all men should not be treated that way. The law says that when a man is over-taken by a faster vehicle, the man driving the slower vehicle shall turn out and give half the beaten path.

10 Per Cent Profit

The Canada Food Board has passed an order which is expected definitely to prevent speculation in the produce business and to limit profits to a reasonable margin over cost. The order provides that on and after July 1st no person dealing wholesale in meats, lard, cheese, butter, oleomargarine or eggs, in selling to a retail dealer or others not wholesale dealers, shall charge on each transaction more than 10 per centum over his cost price delivered to warehouse. When salaried men are employed in buying, or when commission is paid, the charge for such in computing shall not exceed the recognized charge for buying or the customary commission paid.

Five Perish in Fire

Five occupants of the home of Mr. Richard Lyons, Euphrasia township in the remote part of Grey County lost their lives in a fire which destroyed his residence at an early hour on Saturday morning. The dead are: Mr. Lyons, his wife, their 8-year-old son, Lawrence Miss Effie Neeley, a farmerette student at Markdale High School, and Auldon MacLaughlin, a 4-year-old boy from Owen Sound. The origin of the fire is a mystery but it is thought that sparks from a stove pipe running through the roof of a rear shed, fairly close to the main building, ignited the end of the house, which was of frame construction and that the occupants were suffocated with smoke before they could make their escape. The fire was noticed by neighbors but before they reached the scene the buildings were a mass of flames. The bodies of four of the victims were found together in a heap. By the position of the bodies when found it would appear as if they had gone down the stairs, where there was a small landing at the bottom, with the door opening and that, with one or two probably fallen suffocated the others were unable to open the door and perished within a few inches of safety. An inquest was ordered by the assistant coroner at Markdale and a jury was empanelled on Saturday and after viewing the remains the inquest was adjourned for a week.

The success of the last is a guarantee that any further assistance the Canadian people can give, in the way of finances, will be forthcoming as spontaneously as in the previous calls. The people recognize that the security of the Dominion offers the best investment for surplus funds besides recognizing support of war loans as an act of Canadian patriotism.

Eliza a Winner

The Walkerton Amateur Dramatic Club presented the laughable comedy, "Eliza Comes to Stay," to a crowded house here on Thursday, June 6th. The audience were delighted with the play if one is to judge from the applause given. It may be truly said that the applause was earned, for the entire cast was good and the piece presented in a manner that stamped the performers above the average amateurs. The heavy end of the piece fell upon Mr. W. H. McBurney, as Hon. Sandy Verrail, and Miss Florence Cunningham, as Dorothy. His work throughout was of a finished and artistic character showing that he had a splendid conception of the part. Miss Cunningham had a dual part, first appearing as an uneducated hoyden, and in the second part as a refined, educated young lady. It was a difficult role, but was assumed with exceptional cleverness. Her work throughout won rounds of applause. Mr. J. H. Ranesbottom, as Alexander Stoop Verrail, essayed his part in a pleasing and finished manner. Mr. W. A. Burrows, as Montague Jordan, was exceptionally good in the various scenes. Mr. D. J. Krampa, as Herbert, a valet, did his part well. Miss Daisy Benton, as Lady Pennybroke, had a good part which she sustained capitally. Miss Eleanor Gregg, as Miss Vera Laurence, and Miss Marion Robertson, as Mrs. Allaway, also played their parts exceptionally well. The company is admirably balanced and their work refined and enjoyable.—Kincardine Reporter.

Want Sermons Shorter.

With a view to making church services more attractive to children and the man on the street, the Laymen's Association of Toronto Methodist Conference has adopted a list of recommendations regarding the method of conducting services, prepared and presented by a special committee appointed to investigate and report on the matter. The report was presented by T. W. Duggen of Brampton, and it was recommended that the morning service should be so varied and arranged that it should be attractive to the whole family, but a considerable portion should by the nature of the prayers, hymns and address be rendered peculiarly appropriate to children, and thereby the work of the Sunday School would be supplemented. It was desired also that the evening service should not continue more than one hour. It should be of an evangelistic nature and brightened by fervent prayer and addresses on living issues of right and wrong. The programme of the service should be so arranged that the congregation might take a more active part; this to be accomplished by repeating the Lord's Prayer in unison, by responsive reading, by the singing of extra hymns or by the introduction of a special gospel song service. There should be consultation among the minister, choir-leader and officers of the church, in order to discover methods of making meetings more attractive, and it was further recommended that five minutes be devoted to social converse after dismissal. The report met with the approval of the meeting and after a lengthy discussion, was adopted. Several members desired that a limit of one hour should be set on the morning service, but the association finally decided that it would be sufficient to curb the loquacity of the Minister once in the day only.

Appointed Vicar-General

His many Walkerton friends were glad to learn this week of the honor bestowed on Very Rev. J. T. Kelly, who was parish priest at Walkerton for sixteen years and highly thought of by all classes in the community. Father Kelly has been appointed the new Vicar-General of the Diocese of Hamilton and rector of St. Mary's Church, Hamilton. Since his transfer from Arthur a few years ago, Father Kelly has been rector of St. Patrick's, Hamilton. The new appointment will be effective on July 25th.

Deserters Broke Into Cottages

High Constable Briggs was at Sauble Beach last week investigating the complaint that one of the cottages had been broken into and flour, eatables, and furniture stolen. The impression prevails that the thieving was done by military evaders hiding in the woods. A heavy penalty is imposed for helping deserters in any way in giving them food and this makes the grub question a serious one for the fugitives from military service. The fact that some oars from the cottages are missing lead to the suspicion that some evaders have tried rowing across the lake to get away.

Clever Pair From City

Two men giving their names as Arnold and Brophey, circulation managers of the Canadian Home Journal, Toronto, brought a party of returned soldiers to Walkerton on Thursday last and hired four autos through George Bros. to canvass the surrounding country for subscriptions. They said they would need the cars several days but on Friday morning they "beat it" on the 7 a. m. G. T. R. train without settling for the car hire. The liverymen swore out a warrant for their arrest. Chief Ferguson telephoned to Palmerston and as a result the two men drove back from Palmerston around midnight Friday in company with the town Constable. Magistrate Tolton obligingly heard their case at once and let them away after paying their bill for auto hire in full with a nice bill of costs added. Although their wads were considerably reduced they gained experience which should prove valuable hereafter in dealing with "rubes" up in this "neck of the woods". It is reported that they did very little business with the farmers round here, the country people being thoroughly suspicious of strange subscription agents from past experience.

After Local Fish Dealers

The Canada Food Board is reported to be investigating the price of fish at Walkerton. The local dealers are selling Southampton fish here at 20 cents a lb. Mayor Johnston and Coun. Lippert who paid a visit to Toronto last to see the hydro people, are not talking for publication but express themselves as pleased with their visit. They are satisfied that the Hydro Commission is planning to look after Walkerton. The Mayor and Fire and Light Committee are meeting the President of the local power company this week to arrange for a temporary continuance of the street-lighting service.

Snow In June

The Month of June topped off the record of being the coldest in years by snowing on Friday night. Yes, we have it on the word of a prominent citizen who is noted for his veracity. He was driving home from the country Friday night about eleven o'clock and distinctly noted a slight flurry of snow, not enough to be noticeable on the ground but he could feel it blowing against his face as he drove along. How's that for June 21st? (Our informant assures us solemnly that he hasn't taken a drink in years.)

30 Days More

Although Saturday, June 22, was the day officially designated by the Canada registration board for all persons over sixteen years of age throughout the Dominion to register, a further opportunity to fill in their card, and secure a registration certificate will be given those who were unable to register on the date set. For the next thirty days, at all postoffices in Canada, registrations will be received, and persons who have a good reason for failing to register shall not be deemed to have broken the regulations during that period if they cannot produce their certificate.

Housebreaker Caught

Frank Ryan, an eighteen year old chap, was brought down from Park Head by Constable Ward, on Saturday, charged with breaking into a house and stealing $25 and a gold ring. Ryan, whose home is in Toronto, was visiting friends at Park Head and entered a boarding house there while the people were out, stealing the above mentioned articles from the room of a young lady school-teacher. Constable Ward followed him to Owen Sound and arrested him. Ryan pleaded guilty and was remanded until the 27th inst. for sentence. He recently served a term at the Industrial School, Mimico.

Deaths At House of Refuge

Mr. Thomas Taylor, an inmate of the House of Refuge, passed away on Sunday, old age being the cause of his demise. He was formerly a resident of Brant Township. The remains were given decent burial in Walkerton Cemetery, the expenses being defrayed by his nephew. Another death occurred on Monday afternoon when James McKay, suddenly expired while sitting on a bench in the yard along with some other inmates. He was 86 years of age and a bachelor. A brother living in Brantford came up and made the funeral arrangements, the remains being interred in Walkerton Cemetery on Tuesday.

WILFRID McKAY HOME

Walkerton Boy who was In Big Somme Offensive and At Vimy Ridge Now Invalided To Canada.

Another of Walkerton's hergic boys who have done their part so well on the firing line, arrived home last week in the person of Lance-Corp. Wilfrid McKay, son of Mr. and Mrs. Carl McKay. It was known that Wilfrid had landed but it was not learned what train he was coming on and he slipped in quietly on the Friday morning train giving the family a nice surprise.

It was near Lens on May 11th, 1917, that Wilfrid received the wounds that have confined him to hospitals nearly ever since that time. He received a nasty shrapnel wound in the arm and another in the face. Both wounds have completely recovered but nervous trouble in his left leg has completely deprived him of the services of that limb for the present at least, and he gets around with the use of crutches. On July 4th he will report at Whitby Convalescent Hospital, where it is hoped that medical treatment may restore to him the use of the limb.

Wilfrid was one of the large contingent from Walkerton in the 72st Batt'n. He was 18 years of age when he left the employ of G. T. Rourke to enlist. On the breaking up of the 71st in England, he went to France with the 50th Canadian Battalion, a Calgary unit. He was nearly a year in France and was in the thick of some of the desperate battles including the big Somme Offensive and Vimy Ridge where the Canadians won imperishable fame.

On May 11th of last year, he with a chum, were in the act of assisting a shell-shocked soldier on the front line when a shell burst near them. Both he and his chum were hit, the latter in the hip, but the one they were helping escaped injury. Wilfrid was taken to England and spent months in military hospitals at Edinburgh, Buxton, and Epsom. While convalescing he spent a day at Witley Camp some months ago enjoyed seeing many of his old Walkerton pals.

Wilfrid says that the greatest confidence in the outcome of the war is felt in England. And at the very time the line was retiring during the recent big German drive, there was greater confidence than there had been in a year. Conditions have improved in England and the people have confidence in the present military and political leaders.

Wanted

A good general servant. Good wages. Apply to Miss Deacon at the Children's Shelter.

Exemption Cancelled

The exemption from military service of Talbert Boss of Walkerton, and M. Erb of Formosa has been cancelled by the local tribunal. These cases were heard on June 12th.

$250 Raised

The total receipts from the Children's Aid Canvass of the town on Monday will amount about the above figures. $250 is already in the hands of the Treasurer, Mr. W. A. Burrows.

Will Open Saturday

The painters and paper-hangers are almost through at the photo studio and they have made a good job of it. Mr. Donoahue now has a nice, bright, inviting stand and he will now be ready to serve the public. He announces Saturday as opening day.

Fire Brigade Reorganized

What the Ontario Fire Underwriters Inspector thinks about Walkerton's system of fire protection after his visit here Monday morning, wouldn't be fit to publish in any paper. He certainly caught the brigade here when they were not looking. Chief Alex George's resignation was received at the last meeting of the Council. The firemen were asked to name a man for Chief but declined to do so. The Council then appointed Wm. Yeates Chief, but we understand Mr. Yeates claims he did not know of his appointment. At any rate when the alarm bell sounded for inspection on Monday morning there was a poor response to the call. Only four firemen were early on the scene. With the prospect of insurance rates going skyward in Walkerton Mayor Johnston summoned a special meeting of the Council Tuesday night to arrange for the reorganization of the brigade. Mr. A. McCartney was appointed Chief at a salary of $50 a year and was asked to go ahead and choose 10 men to work with him at $20 a year a piece. In the past the chief has received a salary of $25 and the members their time at fires.

WELCOMED HEROES HOME

Citizens Gathered at Town Hall on Thursday Night To Do Honor To Two Walkerton Boys Home From "Over There"

Probably no returned heroes that have come back to the home town have been more in the thick of it, on Land and Sea, than the two boys who received their welcome home by the people of Walkerton on Thursday night at the Town Hall.

Surgeon Wilbur Cryderman was at Salonika through the trying campaigns of 1915—1916, and after a severe illness with cholera which nearly finished him, he managed to get in shape for a new set of experiences. His new work was that of Surgeon on board His Majesty's destroyers in the Mediterranean. The Mediterranean has been the hottest spot on earth for anything that floats and Surgeon Cryderman could no doubt have told a few thrillers about the way against the U boats had he cared to do so. Probably he is the first Walkertonian since Admiral Kingsmill, to have the honor of receiving a Commission in the Royal Navy. His work was such as to win the high commendation of his officers, and his record is certainly one to be proud of.

Surgeon Cryderman, who is recuperating from the effects of his illness, and has to avoid activity or excitement for the present, spoke briefly but to the point. While over there, he said, he had spent most of his time on and about the Mediterranean and had visited most of the countries that border on that Sea. In visiting those countries, the thought that struck him was: Do we Canadians appreciate the fine country we live in? Those countries were alright to visit, but if the boys who are serving over there, could suddenly be dropped into Canada, they would think they were in Heaven. The message he brought from the boys Overseas was one of good cheer. Over there nobody was down-hearted in the least and the confidence of the British people has not lessened but increased. Everything in England is in better shape than a year ago. There is not the same shortage of food. People have more confidence in the outcome. After leaving Salonika most of his time was spent on British destroyers in the Mediterranean and west from the Mediterranean. The work of the destroyers was interesting and perhaps most important of all in winning the war by clearing the seas of the U-boats. As for the Navy, the men are confident and are not the least doubtful as to what will happen to the enemy next time he comes out.

Sergt. Ted. Wilhelm, who came through some of the biggest "shows" on the West Front and had his arm seriously wounded at Passchendaele on Oct. 26th last, proved quite at home on the platform and made a neat little speech. It certainly felt good to him to be home again. He had been well-treated when away and never once had he been sorry he enlisted. He appreciated the good things sent him by the Women's organizations and the Catholic ladies and he wished to thank them. It was certainly great the work the women are doing to help win the war. In England, he said, the soldiers were treated fine, especially, he said with a smile, by the girls. At Liverpool the wounded soldiers were showered with invitations every day for motor drives and all sorts of entertainment. Ted said that if his arm got well and strong again, and he hoped it would, he was going back to take "another crack at the Hun."

Both boys were presented by Rev. R. Perdue, sec. of the Preparedness League with an address of welcome and a gold piece.

Mayor Johnston, who presided as chairman, made a few appropriate remarks. Solos were contributed by Miss Dippel, Rev. Mr. Storey, and a piano solo by Miss Flossie Cosens.

The scroll presented to the two boys which was nicely gotten up bore the heading "For King and Empire" and read as follows:—Certificate of Honor presented to (Surgeon Wilbur Cryderman R. N., Sergt. Ted Wilhelm) by the Preparedness League of the Town of Walkerton in grateful recognition of services rendered to Canada and the Empire by participation in the struggle for freedom and justice as a member of Canada's Expeditionary Forces. Signed and Sealed this 20th. day of June, 1918. A. P. Johnston Mayor, John Rowland Pres., R. Perdue Sec. Treas.

A new illuminated motto has made its appearance in the office of the chairman of the shipping board. It read: Noah was 600 years old before he knew how now to build an ark. Don't loose your grip.

At the wedding reception a young wife remarked: "Wasn't it annoying the way that Nelson baby cried during the whole ceremony?" "It was simply dreadful," replied the prim little maid of honor, "and when I get married I'm going to have engraved right in the corner of the invitations 'no babies expected.'"

POTATOES AND PATRIOTISM

The potato is a great patriot. It has helped to save nations. Let it help to win the war by releasing other essential foods for export.

Potatoes and other starchy vegetables can save wheat. Use them in bread making.

One medium-sized potato gives you as much starch as two slices of bread.

Potatoes give you the salts you need to build and renew all parts of the body.

Savory stews provide an excellent means of using carrots, onions, turnips and potatoes.

Vegetables are invaluable for growing children. Adults must have vegetables to make up the wastage caused by work.

Potatoes at home make more wheat for the allied armies; it is your fight.

Doctors say that the tired-out feeling—spring fever—often comes from lack of fruits and vegetables.

Use perishable Canadian products; in short, use vegetables.

Increase in our consumption of vegetables means an increase in the export of wheat.

To aid in feeding the soldiers overseas eat more cereals, fish, potatoes and vegetables. It's patriotic.

Share your meat with the men at the front by using potatoes, carrots, onions and turnips.

To send the most food possible in the least shipping space, grow and eat bulky vegetables at home in Canada.

TRAGEDY OF ERRORS

The Fire Marshall of the State of Wisconsin has issued a bulletin which he terms a "Comedy of Errors." It should have been called a tragedy. It says:

He looked for a gas leak with a match and found it.

He lighted a match to see if his gasoline tank was empty. It was not.

He smoked while filling his auto tank but will do so no more.

He smoked in bed, so did the bed clothes.

He threw the matches into the waste paper basket. He is wiser now.

He threw a cigarette stub into some rubbish.

He saved his oily waste and oily rags and they burned his shop.

He washed his hands in gasoline near the stove. The doctor washes them now.

He did not worry about fires as he had "plenty of insurance," and forgot the safety of his wife and children upstairs.

He stuffed up the chimney holes with paper and rags.

She cleaned her gloves with gasoline and saved fifteen cents, but paid the doctor and druggist fifteen dollars.

She poured kerosene into the lamp while the wick was burning.

She put gasoline into the wash boiler on the stove to make washing easier.

She dried clothes too near the stove.

She used the wrong oil can.

She burned sulphur all over the house to fumigate.

She used the woodbox back of the range as a waste paper receptacle.

She gave matches to her children to go out and burn leaves in the yard. The cotton dresses burned easier than the leaves.

She was "coming right back," so left the electric current on in her iron.

She swung the gas bracket too close to the curtains.

She fixed up a fine tissue paper shade for the lamp.

She filled the tank of her gasoline stove while one burner was going.

The comedies have turned to tragedies; many of the scenes of action were in ashes and too many of the actors are maimed or asleep; others will follow, no doubt, as they are prone to ignore the advice and experience of others instead of profiting by their errors and sufferings.

POLICE AFTER THE RESTFUL

The round up of the gentlemen of rest between the tender ages of 16 and 60 has begun. It made a good start yesterday, and if the persistent pace set keeps up when the fields take on their verdage of summer there won't be a loafer in Fordwich to lie on his back on the banks of the Maitland and think what a lovely old world this is for a loaf. Everybody's got to go to work.

Plainclothesmen Rogers and Sutherland corralled four alleged offenders under the new order-in-Council yesterday. Jas. Beswitherick, Harry Cook, Wm. Gibson and Jos. Davidson. They all had excuses.

Beswitherick was discharged from the army in 1917 and had been sick. This was to his credit and he was given till Monday to get busy.

Cook was found asleep in the public shed; hadn't worked for two weeks. He was Scotch, had been in Canada a whole six years and wasn't more than 50. He too, had tried to enlist, and was turned over to the military.

Gibson, an Irishman, told the magistrates he "didn't have to work," and what was more "he didn't have to come along." He, too, had been rejected for poor heart and flat feet. He gets till Tuesday to find a job.

Davidson gets a week's grace. He had been taking a holiday.

Two other worthies, Walter McMichael and Peter Doig, also came under the constable's vision. The former was warned to keep off Main street and the latter kindly advised that it would be as well for him to remain home on the farm. Others cases are likely to follow.—Fordwich Record.

IT'S ALL OF THAT

The chairman of the committee was addressing a meeting at a teachers' institute:

"My friends, the schoolwork is the bulhouse of civilization. I mean—ah—"

He began to feel frightened.

"The bulhouse is the schoolwork of civ—"

A smile could be felt.

"The workhouse is the bulschool of—"

He was evidently twisted.

"The bulschool is the housework—"

An audible snigger spread over the audience.

"The bulschool—"

He was getting wild. So were his hearers. He mopped his perspiration, gritted his teeth, and made a fresh start.

"The schoolhouse, my friends—"

A sigh went up. Hamlet was himself again.

He gazed serenely around. The light of triumphant self-confidence was enthroned upon his brow.

"Is the woolbark—"

And then he lost consciousness.

An old lady in Toronto, of 80 years, has just finished her 115th pair of socks since the war began. This has a lot of the younger girls beat a mile, the reason, perhaps, being that the younger girls are knitting for only one, while the aged ladies love all the boys, and knit for them indiscriminately. There may be a better record than the above right in Walkerton, or Bruce County.

Must Carry Documents

Officials of the Military Service Council stated that the registration card was not sufficient for a man of Military age. He must carry other documents, as called for under the order of May 22, such as marriage license, passports, etc. It has been found very difficult in many cases called for under this order in Council. It has been decided to accept prima facie evidence as to a man's ineligibility or right to exemption if he cannot secure the proper documents.

The Habit of Unhappiness

Every time you talk about your discomforts, you are helping to fix the habit of unhappiness. If you encourage yourself to be critical, you are doing the same thing. It is singular that when joy means so much to us, when happiness is a deep rooted longing in every heart, we should deliberately set ourselves to form the habits that are so fruitful a source of misery. The critical fault-finding people whose eyes are so keen to see flaws, and whose tongues are so given to complaint, are to make misery wherever they go. Be on your guard against forming the habit of unhappiness.

Prime Minister Hughes,
From Heroic Australia,
Visits This Continent

THERE are few more interesting men in the world than the Right Honorable William M. Hughes, whose arrival at a Pacific port was announced during the last week of May. Docker, labor leader, politician in Australia; statesman and orator both in Australia and in the British Isles, Mr. Hughes received a welcome from the people of the United States as one who typifies in another commonwealth qualities of true modern democracy.

It is little more than two years ago now since Mr. Hughes passed across this continent on his way to England. He was then little known in London and far less in Ottawa or Washington. But in two brief months he had become a commanding figure in British politics and about him centred a movement to "ginger up" the war. His speeches attracted an attention which they deserved and at a critical time in the war had an influence which cannot be exaggerated. He literally took England by storm and scored a real success in France.

After his successful English visit the Prime Minister returned to Australia to engage in a fight for conscription, in which he was beaten. But despite his defeat he remained the leader of his country and the exponent of Australian determination to fight it out. A little man in physique, unmistakably familiar with hard work, a Welshman, like David Lloyd George; a dangerous opponent in debate, a good fighter, a democrat, William M. Hughes has earned a place in Allied council and in Allied affairs as one of the men who have helped to keep the fight going and to make the victory possible.

Before he left Australia two years ago he gave orders for the elimination of German influence from the great metal industries of Australia. "If they should ask me how it was to be done, before God I could not tell them," he once remarked, "but they know that I will find a way." This is "Billy" Hughes. He did find a way.

It is to be hoped now that there will be a chance for the Canadian people to hear his virile words and receive the information and encouragement which he brings from Australia. There are few men in the world living outside our own frontiers who more thoroughly understand or sympathize with Canadian ideas and Canadian ideals than Mr. Hughes. And he should be, therefore, a welcome and an honored guest in the Dominion.

The Sun's Heat.

Why is the air generally much colder a mile above the earth than near the ground? The heat of the atmosphere comes from the sun, but by a somewhat indirect process. The incoming sunbeams are only slightly absorbed by the dry air at high levels, and so have little effect on its temperature. In the lower regions of the atmosphere there is always a considerable amount of water vapor (water in the form of gas), and this substance has a relatively large capacity for absorbing heat from sunshine. Lastly, the earth absorbs all the heat that falls upon it, and then gives it back, by radiation or conduction, to the air above it. Thus the atmosphere is mainly heated from below and not from above. Air heated near the ground tends to rise, but it cools rapidly in rising. As it reaches higher levels the pressure upon it is less; it expands, pushing away the surrounding air, and it uses up in this work some of the energy that it originally possessed in the form of heat. This process is referred to by scientists as "adiabatic cooling."

This explains why the heat of summer often seems to come up from the ground rather than from the boiling sun above.—Popular Science Monthly.

Time's Changes.

"Times have changed," mused Broncho Bob. "Times have changed." "Crimson Gulch does seem less turbulent."

"No doubt about it. In the old days if a tenderfoot refused to take a drink with the boys, they'd shoot at him. Now if they catch one trying to bring a bottle into town with him, they have him arrested."

Paper Rugs.

Rugs are now being made entirely from fine tissue paper and mixtures of paper and wool. The tissue paper is twisted into thread and woven into a compact heavy mat or fabric.

Some idea of the acuteness of the labor problem in this section may be understood by the fact that a young high school girl, living with her widowed mother on a Carrick farm, volunteered to go out and drive the team to haul gravel to put in their statute labor The only son or, the farm had been drafted, but the daughter was ready to do her part.—Mildmay Gazette.

Shot Off Two Fingers

Norman Brown, who is employed on the farm with Geo. Neil, 6th concession, Arran, had the two first fingers of his right hand shot off on Thursday. He had been shooting birds with a shot gun and when the gun failed to go off he tried to dig the shell out with his fingers when the shell exploded, severing the two fingers. Mr Brown is a son of Mr. Jerry Brown, of Dobbington.

The Duke At Chesley

The Enterprise says:—The Duke in reply thanked the citizens for their kind reception and in regard to the war said there were no prospect of a speedy termination. He also made special reference to what had been said in the address about so many Indians in Bruce having joined the fighting forces, and said the Indians of Canada had ever been loyal to the British Crown. The Duke is not a fluent speaker and does not speak impressively. His object in travelling through the country is to see how Canadians are standing the strain of the war and to urge them on to greater efforts. The Duchess and her daughters were quite affable and did not seem to be a bit stuck up.

Cutting Booze Out Of Extracts

Chief Constable Kidd was around among the merchants last week warning them that they must keep a record of sales of extracts such as essence of Ginger, essence of Peppermint and essence of Lemon, same as druggists keep tab on poisons. License Inspector White has notified the local sleuth that in the absence of the real old stinge that some are getting a hilarious feeling on these essences which contain a considerable percentage of alcohol. Soon there will be nothing to drink stronger that Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, Mother Winslow's Soothing Syrup and Fletcher's Castoria. Those who like a snort of the real old stinge, will say; "What is this old world coming to."—Chesley Enterprise.

Paralized By Parsnips

Lemon extract, bay rum, tanlac, pain killer, shelac, all these and some others have been blamed at different times for producing symptoms of intoxication, but another source of alcoholic stimulus was made known in the Owen Sound Police court last last week when Martin Allen and Frank Beattie were charged with breach of the Ontario Temperance Act by being drunk. The story as told in court was that they had accumulated their jags from a mixture said to have been made by Walter Cameron, and consisting of parsnips boiled to a pulp and mixed with yeast and a little molasses and allowed to stand for a few days. As to the palatable qualities of the mixture nothing was adduced in evidence, but there was no doubt as to its potency. Allen and Beattie were fined $15 and costs apiece, each contributing $20.75.—Flesherton Advance.

PUBLIC NOTICE

Military Service Act, 1917.

Men 19 and 20 Years of Age.
Harvest Leave.
Leave of Absence on Ground of Extreme Hardship.
Procedure to obtain Leave of Absence.

Men Nineteen and Twenty Years of Age.

It has come to the attention of the Government that there is a widespread impression that young men of nineteen years, and those who became twenty since October 13, 1917, as well as those who may become nineteen from time to time and who have been or will be called upon to register under the Military Service Act, are to be immediately called to the colours.

This impression is quite incorrect. No date has yet been fixed for calling upon such men to so report for duty, nor has the question been brought before the Cabinet for decision. In view of the need of labour on the farm, it is most unlikely that consideration will be given to the matter until after the harvest is over, although of course the Government's action must be determined primarily by the military situation.

There is no further obligation incumbent upon young men of the ages above mentioned who have registered or who do so hereafter, until they receive notice from the Registrars.

Harvest Leave.

Some enquiries have been received as to the possibility of granting harvest leave to such troops as may be in the country at that time. No definite assurance can be given on this point as advantage must be taken of ships as they become available. On the other hand, harvest leave will be given if at all possible.

Leave of Absence on Grounds of Extreme Hardship.

It is desired that the Regulations respecting leave of absence in cases of hardship should be widely known and fully understood. Such leave will be granted in two cases:— (a) where extreme hardship arises by reason of the fact that the man concerned is either the only son capable of earning a livelihood, of a father killed or disabled on service or presently in service overseas, or in training for such service, or under treatment after returning from overseas; or the only remaining of two or more brothers capable of earning a livelihood (the other brother or brothers having been killed or disabled on service, or being presently in service overseas, or in training for overseas or under treatment after his of their return from overseas); brothers married before 4th August, 1914, living in separate establishments and having a child or children not to be counted, in determining the fact that the man is the "only" remaining son or brother; (b) where extreme hardship arises by reason of exceptional circumstances such as the fact that the man concerned is the sole support of a widowed mother, an invalid father or other helpless dependents.

It is to be noted that in all these cases the governing factor is not hardship, loss or suffering to the individual concerned, but to others, that is, members of his family or those depending upon him.

Procedure to obtain leave of absence.

A simple system for dealing with these cases has been adopted. Forms of application have been supplied to every Depot Battalion and an officer of each battalion has been detailed whose duty it is to give them immediate attention. The man concerned should on reporting to his unit state that he desires to apply for leave of absence on one or more of the grounds mentioned and his application form will then be filled out and forwarded to Militia Headquarters, Ottawa. In the meantime, if the case appears meritorious, the man will be given provisional leave of absence for thirty days so that he may return home and continue his civil occupation while his case is being finally disposed of.

SAW GOTHAS BROT DOWN

Ed. Erdman Tells How Ten Enemy Airmen Were Got In The Night.

Mrs. M. Erdman had a letter this week from her son, Ted, at the battle front, dated June 2nd, which we publish herewith. Ed. encloses as a souvenir a piece of linen sheeting cut from one of the Gothas which he tells about in his letter.

Dear Mother:—

Just a line to-day to let you know that we are well and having a very hot and interesting time at times. It was hell for a few nights but our airmen sure put the wind up the Huns a few nights ago. Just around where we are stationed our airmen brought down ten of the Hun big planes and every one was burned to death. It sure was grand to see those square heads come down in flames. There were great cheers when they were coming down. This took place at night and it sure was a grand sight. You may think this sounds pretty raw and cruel but being burned to death is too good a death for some of the Hun airmen as they would just as soon drop their bombs on a hospital as any other place. Last Wednesday we had a big field day of sports. We won the lacrosse game also the baseball game. Our lacrosse team has played three games and won each one and if we can only hold the team together and win a few more games why we may get a little trip out of it. Our baseball team has trimmed two of the Yankee teams so far. No doubt you will be kept quite busy this hot weather. We have been getting some grand weather of late and now that June is here we should have some more of the good old hay maker. I guess I will not be going on leave for a couple of months yet. This piece of painted cloth in this note is a piece of one of the wings of a Gotha brought down near our billet the night our fellows accounted for ten Gothas. These Gothas carry 4 men and machine guns and hundreds of pounds of bombs and our machines that brought them down are manned by one man, so there is another instance where our boys fought or had to fight one to four. Well, mother, I will close with best to all hoping to hear from you soon.

Yours,
Ted.

A Curious Plant

Mr. E. Walford has a strange plant in his backyard that for luxuriant growth rivals the tropics. From a root this Spring it has grown a stalk about 5 inches around which extends almost as high as the roof of the cottage and about 10ft. across. The leaves which are something like maple leaves in shape are over 1ft. long. The "banana plant" as it is called, bears no fruit but has clusters of small white flowers. It is like a house-plant magnified to an enormous size. This is not the only interesting feature of Mr. Walford's garden where nature has richly responded to constant and skillful care, giving him one of the nicest and neatest properties in the town.

Is Golf Club Secretary

Mr. Earl M. Bush, son of Mr. W. M. Bush, has secured temporary leave of absence from the Bank of Commerce out West owing to ill-health and has taken a less confining position for the summer as residence secretary of the Winnipeg Golf Club. The Winnipeg Free Press recently published Earl's picture and the following reference lately to his good work at the Golf Club:—"E. M. Bush, the popular residence secretary of the Winnipeg Golf club, has everything running in splendid shape at the Bird's Hill club this year. Mr. Bush has just recently made an innovation at the club house in the way of hiring oriental help in order to help out with the scarcity of labor and so far the move has proven very successful."

The Women Too

The law says that it is just as compulsory for women to carry their certificates of registration as men. Whenever asked to produce it they must have it on hand. This has brought forward all kinds of discussions among the women as to where on earth they will carry these certificates about their persons where they will be obtainable at a moment's notice. Several of the deputy registrars suggested that the women make a duplicate copy of the numbers in the right hand corner. The first number indicates the district registered in, the second the number of the deputy registrar, and the third the serial number. If this is done a new certificate can be obtained at any time from the Post Office, if the old one is lost.

FALL WHEAT SEED ANNOUNCEMENT

In view of the partial failure of the Fall wheat crop in this Province this year it will be necessary for farmers to make early arrangements for the supply of seed which they will need for Fall sowing. Under those circumstances farmers who have on hand quantities of wheat suitable for Fall seeding are urged to conserve them for this purpose. If there is no demand locally, the information should be supplied to this Department or to the Local Office of the Department in your County so that every effort may be made to have an equitable and satisfactory distribution. The need for foodstuffs justifies a large acreage of Fall wheat in this Province again this year, and the co-operation of the farmers in the mobilization and distribution of the available seed supplies is invited.

EDEN GROVE

On the street—in the stores—everywhere, one hears of the great change taking place "over there." We seldom hear of the miraculous changes "over here." Now take Angus Blue for instance. Born white, called Blue, the sun soon made him tan Brown and a few years later he was a blacksmith. Startling as these changes must seve been, his present is farmer.

Twuz a quiet meetin of the Red Cross Sassiety. Harmony wuz fergot and 'argyments most bitter. Over at the Stushun it sounded Jolke this here.

Will it sarves yous rite. Yous voted for Borden. H.—Borden—I cud kill 'im. K.—Borden D.—Bordon—etc. etc.

(Shure from the tornedo of yelps that Borden feller must be a prime favorite jist now wid de wimmen)

Thin another voice chimed in. If them boys is taken we can't get our crops in nehow. They promised 'im exemption. Why doant they didit?

Yep and yous bit inter the sugar and got sick. Now yer yell with a pain in yer tummy.

For why shud my dear lads go and yours stay to hum. Well acza meekly tired voice. Sombodies gotter go. The wars gotter be won and whos goin to won it if nobody goes. Jist thin the train kum in and I cud hear no more.

The Reverend Mr. Storey gave a mighty good farewell sermon last Sunday to a mighty small congregation. The music by the choir and solo by Miss F. Seiler were much enjoyed.

Without discussing what has happened in the past if the last words of our departing minister were to bear fruit it would be one grand thing for the Methodist church of Eden Grove and the members thereof. Love and stick to your church loyally as an institution whose work is good. Never mind criticizing the minister—never mind if you have quarrelled or do quarrel with any members of the congregation—stick to it—its as much yours as the other fellows—Be loyal to your church.

At a meeting held in the City Hall last Tuesday evening for the purpose of wishing godspeed to Alex. Mckeeman and family the following address was read and a sum of money presented.

It is with regret that we look forward to the departure of you and yours from our midst During the time—the long time—of your living amongst us have you endeared yourself to a host of friends and it is our pleasure to represent them on this occasion and tender to you not only a few sincere words of of sorrow at losing you and yours but also to hand to you a slight token of our deep affection.

Though you are leaving us for a far country to carve out a fresh career (of crime), we trust you will be back again and yet again to see and renew your acquaintance with us. We all of us desire to wish you godspeed and good luck in the new land of your choice (rascality) and trust you will fall a mong neighbors who will appreciate your good qualities as have those of us who are herewith pleased to extend to you a small memento of our love and esteem.

Signed on behalf of your friends and neighbors,

(A list as long as your arm)

After Phillips had stuttered through the above, a speech was made by the recipient who, in a few well chosen words (the usual bee) thanked those present. Then Jack Seiler hummed a little praise and W. J. McKeeman, brother of the evening's hero, told a little truth—also a little story (do you remember it?) and the dance was renewed.

Mike Conner as violinist excelled himself (surprised me he did.) Big Bill Alexander called off and everybody down to Joe O'Reilly danced. By golly it was some night. Mrs. himself was so pleased that his stickin around for a repetition of it.

Tom Desmond and wife were in London last week to see their son Jack who is expected to leave shortly for overseas. Though their departure has been postponed, it is expected both Jack and Harold Scott will soon be on their way.

I wuz down to Walkerton last Monday to git a noo suit. I tried on a yaller coot, a pink 'un and a scumbinashum coot. Becoz I didn't like'm, the feller got mad and throo me inter the stove ware I got black coot. Then before I cud say I'd take it he got to bellerin and blue coot on me. I wuz so mad I wint out and put a lawsuit on him.

Hiram.

CARGILL

The farewell service of Rev. H. H. Storey proved an event of unusual interest. The Anglicans and Presbyterians gave up their services and united with the Methodists, almost filling the church. Mr. Storey spoke eloquently on "The Church for the New Age." He claimed that the church had a practical mission to perform. In fulfilling this mission church members could develop the noblest and most chivalrous qualities. The speaker urged the people not to exhaust all their energies in secular concerns, but to bring the qualities manifested by the British soldiers, i. e willingness to serve, devotion to duty, superb bravery, into their church life. A spirit-filled church is the surest preventive of all strife, local, national and universal.

Rev. Mr. Haggar of the Cargill Anglican church assisted. The choir sang the anthem splendidly. Mr. Storey left for Freelton. His removal is regretted, but we wish him every success in his new field.

SOLWAY

Mr. A. J. Knoll has purchased a new Ford car.

Mr. George Hilgartner of Hanover arrived home from the West last week after a sojourn there of two and a half months. He visited Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. He liked the western provinces pretty well, especially Manitoba, but for the comforts of life none of them are in it with Ontario.

Enoch Weltz, aged 35, a farmer residing two miles south of Hanover, was fatally injured when his foot caught as he was trying to keep a belt from slipping off the wheel of a gasoline engine while he was sawing wood. He was buried through the air and landed on top of the engine. He had both legs broken, one of them in three places, and every rib on one side torn from the spine. He lived 24 hours after the accident. Besides his wife he leaves 3 children who have the sympathy of the whole community.

Inspector Wright while visiting in Flesherton recently, captured a trout weighing 2¼ lbs.

A member of the old lacrosse guard of Hanover has suggested to The Post a line-up of married men who he thinks, could give any team of single fellows in Hanover a real game. We would be glad to print the names of a competitive team. Following is the line-up suggested: Goal, G. Booth; Point, W. Wendorf; Cover, L. Girodat; Defence Field, H. Wendorf and S. Schulte; Centre, S. Wendorf; Home Field E. Houert and E. Devlin; Outside, D. Reis; Inside, A. Ries. The trouble with team is that "the old guard" has picked most of the good ones in town.

Three leading roads through Grey County have been designated as Provincial County Roads, the Government to pay 60 per cent of the cost, both of construction and maintenance. These are from Collingwood via Thornbury and Meaford, from Mount Forest via Durham along the Garafraxa; and from Shelburne up the Toronto Line, all to a remote point in the Northern part of the County, known as Owen Sound.

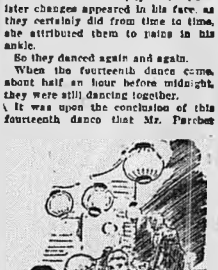
A Tale of Youth and Summer Time and the Baxter Family, Especially William

By
BOOTH TARKINGTON

Copyright, 1916, 1916, by Metropolitan Magazine.

What Miss Pratt had offered him was a choice between the thirty-second dance and the twenty-first extra. That was what he had to look forward to—the thirty-second regular or the twenty-first extra!



Meanwhile, merely through eternity, he was sealed unto Miss Boke.

The tie that bound them oppressed him as if it had been an ill omened matrimony, and he sat beside her like an unwilling old husband. All the while Miss Boke had no appreciation whatever of her companion's real condition, and when little, spasmodic, sinister changes appeared in his face as they certainly did from time to time, she attributed them to pains in his ankle.

So they danced again and again.

When the fourteenth dance came, about half an hour before midnight, they were still dancing together.

It was upon the conclusion of this fourteenth dance that Mr. Parcher

"N'otty ickle boy Baxter fluttin'!"

mentioned to his wife a change in his feelings toward William. "I've been watching him," said Mr. Parcher, "and I never saw true misery show plainer. He's having a really horrible time. By George, I hate him, but I've begun to feel kind of sorry for him! Can't you trot up somebody else, so he can get away from that fat girl?"

Mrs. Parcher shook her head in a discouraged way. "I've tried, and I've tried, and I've tried," she said.

"Well, try again."

"I can't now." She waved her hand toward the rear of the house. Round the corner marched a short procession of negroes, bearing trays, and the dancers were dispersing themselves to chairs upon the lawn for refreshments.

"Well, do something," Mr. Parcher urged. "We don't want to find him in the cistern in the morning."

Mrs. Parcher looked thoughtful; then brightened. "I know!" she said. "I'll make May and Lola and their partners come sit in this little circle of chairs here, and then I'll go and bring William and Miss Boke to sit with them. I'll give Willie the seat at Lola's left. You keep the chairs."

Straightway she sped upon her kindly errand. It proved successful, as successful, indeed, that without the slightest effort, without even a hint on her part, she brought not only William and his constant friend to sit in the circle with Miss Pratt, Miss Parcher and their escorts, but Mr. Bullitt, Mr. Watson, Mr. Banks and three other young gentlemen as well. Nevertheless Mrs. Parcher managed to carry out her plan and, after a little display of firmness, saw William satisfactorily established in the chair at Miss Pratt's left.

At last, at last he sat beside the fairy-like creature and filled his lungs with infinitesimal particles of violet scent. She whispered:

"N'oty ickle boy Baxter! Lola's last night, an' ickle boy Baxter duttin'! Plet all night wif dray bid dirt!"

William made no reply.

There are occasions, infrequent, of course, when even a bachelor is not flattered by being accused of flirting. William's feelings toward Miss Boke had by this time come to such a pass that he regarded the charge of flirting with her as little less than an implication of grave mental deficiency. And well he remembered how Miss Pratt, beholding his subjugated gymnast in the dance, had grown pink with laughter. But still the rose leaf lips whispered:

"Lola saw! Lola saw bad boy Baxter under dray bid tree duttin' wif dray bid dirt. Fluttin' all night wif dray, bid, 'normous dirt!"

Her cruelty was all unwitting. She intended to rally him sweetly. But seventeen is deathly serious at such junctures, and William was in a sensitive condition.

"Do trust?" whispered Lola.

He spake not.

"I wasn't my fault 'bout dancin'," she said. "Dad boy! I can't make 'em turn so late!"

He maintained his silence and the accompanying icy dignity, whereupon she made a charming little pout.

"Do be so 'fraid," she said. "Lola talk to nice Man uvver side of her!"

With that she turned her back upon him and prattled merrily to the gentleman of sixteen upon her right.

Still and cold sat William. Let her talk to the Man at the other side of her as she would, and ever so gayly, William knew that she was conscious every instant of the reproachful presence upon her left. And somehow these moments of quiet and melancholy dignity became the most satisfactory he had known that evening, for as he sat, so silent, so austere, and not yet eating, though a plate of chicken salad had been placed upon his lap, he began to feel that there was somewhere about him a mysterious superiority which set him apart from other people and above them.

And, although Miss Pratt continued to make merry with the Man upon her right, it seemed to William that this was but outward show. He had a strange, subtle impression that the mysterious superiority which set him apart from others was becoming perceptible to her; that she was feeling it too.

Over the chatter and laughter of the guests rose a too familiar voice. "Lemme help you to nice tongue sanwich, lady. Nom? Nice green lettuce sanwich, lady?"

Genesis!

"Nice tongue sanwich, sah? Nice lettuce sanwich, lady?" he could be heard vociferating, perhaps a little too much as if he had sandwiches for sale. "Lemme jes' lay this nice green lettuce sanwich on you' plate fer you, lady."

Because he was a new waiter he strongly wished to show familiarity with his duties—familiarity, in fact, with everything and everybody. This yearning, born of self doubt and intensified by a slight touch of gin, was beyond question the inspiration of his painful behavior when he came near the circle of chairs where sat Mr. and Mrs. Parcher, Miss Parcher, Miss Pratt, Miss Boke, Mr. Watson, Mr. Bullitt, others and William.

"Nice tongue sanwich, lady?" he announced a moment later, walking beneath his high borne tray. "Nice green lettuce sam"— He came suddenly to a dramatic dead stop as he beheld William sitting before him, wearing that strange new dignity and Mr. Baxter's evening clothes. "Name o' goo'ness!" Genesis exclaimed, so loudly that every one looked up. "How in the livin' worl' you evuh come to git here? You' daddy sut'ny mus' 'a' weakened 'way down 'fo' he let you wear his low cut ves' an' pants an' long tail coat! I bet any man 50 cents you gone an' stole 'em out afuh he done went to bed!"

And he burst into a wild, free African laugh.

At seventeen such things are not embarrassing; they are catastrophical. But, mercifully, catastrophes often produce numbness in the victims. More so in a trance than actually William heard the outbreak of his young companions.

A flourish of music challenged the dancers. Couples appeared upon the platform.

The dreadful supper was over.

The ineffable One, supremely pink, rose from her seat at William's side and moved toward the platform with the glowing Zoe Bullitt. Then William, roused to action by this sight, sprang to his feet and took a step toward them, but it was only one weak step.

A warm and ample hand placed itself firmly inside the crook of his elbow. "Let's get started for this one before the floor gets all crowded up," said Miss Boke.

Miss Boke danced and danced with him. She danced him on and on and on.

* * * * * * *

At half past 1 the orchestra played "Home, Sweet Home." As the last bars sounded a group of earnest young men who had surrounded the lovely guest of honor, talking vehemently, broke into loud shouts, embraced one another and capered variously over the lawn. Mr. Parcher beheld from a distance these manifestations and then, with an astonishment even more profound, took note of the tragic William, who was running toward him, radiant, Miss Boke hovering futilely in the far background.

"What's all the hullabaloo?" Mr. Parcher inquired.

"Miss Pratt!" gasped William. "Miss Pratt!"

"Well, what about her?"

And upon receiving William's reply Mr. Parcher might well have discerned behind it the invisible hand of an ironic but recompensing Providence making things even—taking from the one to give to the other.

"She's going to stay!" shouted the happy William. "She's promised to stay another week!"

And then, mingling with the sounds of rejoicing, there ascended to heaven the stricken cry of an elderly man plunging blindly into the house in search of his wife.

Jane one sunshiny morning stood outdoors watching interestedly the unloading of moving vans into a house across the way. Her mouth was equally affected, remaining open at a visible crisis in the performance of its duty—consuming bread and apple sauce. These were the tokens of her agitation upon beholding the removal of a fella' house from one of the wagons. This dolls' house was at least five feet high, of proportionate breadth and depth, the customary absence of a facade disclosing an interior of four luxurious floors, with stairways, fireplaces and wall paper. Here was a mansion wherein dun duchesses, no less, must dwell.

Straightway a little girl ran out of the open doorway of the brick house and with a self importance concentrated to the point of shrewishness, began to give orders concerning the disposal of her personal property, which included, as she made clear, not only the dolls' mansion, but also three dolls' trunks and a packing case of fair size.

She was a thin little girl, perhaps half a year younger than Jane, and she was as soiled, particularly in respect to hands, brow, chin and the knees of white stockings, as could be expected of any heavybodyish person of nine or ten whose mother is house moving.

The little girl across the street was of course instantly aware of Jane, though she pretended not to be, and from the first her self importance was in large part assumed for the benefit of the observer. After a momentary silence, due to her failure to think of any proper response to workmen who had pointedly criticised her, she resumed the peremptory direction of her affairs.

Then, apparently in the very midst of her cares, she suddenly and without warning ceased to boss, walked out into the street, halted and stared frankly at Jane.

CHAPTER XX.
"Don't Forget."

JANE came out to the sidewalk and began to kick one of the fence pickets.

"You see that ole fatty?" asked the little girl, pointing to one of the workmen thus sufficiently identified.

"Yes."

"That's the one broke the goldfish," said the little girl. There was a pause, during which she continued to scuff the curbstone with her shoe, Jane likewise scuffing the fence picket. "I'm goin' to have papa get him arrested," added the stranger.

"My papa got two men arrested once," Jane said calmly, "two or three."

The little girl's eyes, wandering upward, took note of Jane's papa's bonne and of a fierce young gentleman framed in an open window upstairs. He was seated, wore ink upon his forehead and tapped his teeth with a red penholder.

"Who is that?" she asked.

"It's Willie."

"Is it your papa?"

"No-o-o-o!" Jane exclaimed. "It's Willie!"

"Oh!" said the little girl, apparently satisfied.

Each now scuffed less energetically with her shoe; feet slowed down, so did conversation, and for a time Jane and the stranger wrapped themselves in stillness, though there may have been some silent communing between them. Then the new neighbor placed her feet far apart and leaned backward upon nothing, curving her front upward and her remarkably flexible spine inward until a profile view of her was grandly semicircular.

"Look!" she said. "Look at me!"

Jane watched her attentively, but without comment. However, no one could have doubted that the processes of acquaintance were progressing favorably.

"Let's go in our yard," said Jane.

The little girl straightened herself with a slight gasp and accepted the invitation. Side by side the two passed through the open gate, walked gravely forth upon the lawn and halted as by common consent. Jane thereupon placed her feet wide apart and leaned backward upon nothing, attempting the feat in contortion just performed by the stranger.

"Look!" she said. "Look at me!"

But she lacked the other's genius, lost her balance and fell. Born persistent, she immediately got to her feet and made fresh efforts.

"No! Look at me!" the little girl cried, becoming semicircular again. "This is the way: I call it 'puttin' your stummick out o' joint.' You haven't got yours out far enough."

"Yes, I have," said Jane, gasping.

"Well, to do it right, you must walk that way. As soon as you get your stummick out o' joint you must begin an' walk. Look! Like this!" And the little girl having achieved a state of such convexity that her braided hair almost touched the ground behind her, walked successfully in that singular attitude.

"I'm walkin'," Jane protested, her face not quite upside down. "Look! I'm walkin' that way too. My stummick"—

There came an outraged shout from above, and a fierce countenance stained with ink protruded from the window.

"Jane!"

"What?"

"Stop that! Stop putting your stomach out in front of you like that! It's disgraceful!"

Both young ladies, looking rather oppressed, resumed the perpendicular. "Why doesn't he like it?" the stranger asked in a tone of cute wonder.

The vigilance of the track walkers of a railway cannot always prevent accidents from falling rocks. We think by this time most citizens know they should turn out to the right when they meet an auto or other conveyance on the road. But only a few days ago we learned of a near accident from lack of knowledge as to which way the driver should turn to allow an auto to pass him on the public highway. In the case of an auto or a horse and rig passing another conveyance the driver being passed should always turn to the right and the vehicle passing the other should always pass it on the left side. It's easy to remember and attention to this simple rule of the road will prevent accidents.

But Wingham has nothing on Listowel in this respect, for this week rumor had one of the town's young men dead and as far as we learned, the nearest he came to it was enlisting at London. Everywhere men who suddenly attain prosperity spend money foolishly. A story is told in Commerce and Finance illustrating the point in the case of a Southern darky who had made money as a result of the high price of cotton. He went to buy a phonograph. "How many children have you?" asked the phonograph man during the transaction. "I has eight," was the answer. "One phonograph for eight children!" exclaimed the salesman: "that will never do! You need two." And he sold them.

Look Out For These

The following story comes from near Lucan: "Complaint has been made to the county police that two men impersonating Government officials recently visited the home of a farmer in Biddulph Township, and, declaring that they were representing the Canada Food Board, conducted a search of the premises and communicated 600 pounds of flour and one large hog that had just been killed. The men berated the farmer for his alleged lack of patriotism, and, placing the flour and pork in their automobile, drove away. Some time after the farmer awoke to the fact that he had been neatly swindled, and informed Magistrate Caleb Hawkshaw, who is now taking steps to have the matter investigated.

Strange Battle Incidents

Peasants turned adrift in the tide of battle have, in many cases lost not only home, but children. At Neuve Eglise two mere babies were actually in the German front line trenches. They had strayed from their parents during the evacuation. When the British held the village they hid in a cellar, and after the British retirement were discovered by the Germans. The latter took them —presumably for safety, as the British guns were shelling the ruins very heavily—into the trenches at the edge of the village, where they lay during the British counter-attack. They were found unhurt, but very frightened, by the first British soldiers charging into the village with bayonets poised. Two gunners found another lost child wandering disconsolately in the maze of war traffic. They took it to a barn where they were billeted, and made a bed for it on the straw between their own. In the night German aeroplanes dropped bombs on to the barn and killed both gunners, but the child was found unhurt next morning.

The other day in Toronto a man was caught "boot legging." His price was $8.00 for a reputed quart flask. And to think men here not yet old can remember when the stuff was at the call of any thirsty customer, in Walkerton stores, as free, and easier to get than water is now.

A small boy recently approached his mother with the following: "Ma, please give me a nickel to give to a lame man." Getting the nickel from her purse, the mother asked. "Who is the lame man dear?" Just then her hopeful had reached the door, but he stopped long enough to shout back, "He's the ticket seller at the picture show."

Two colored waiters were lately overheard deep in a discussion of the various phases of dumbness. Finally after a number of illustrations had been cited, one capped the climax by observing with great seriousness: "Yes, suh, dat nigger wuz dat dumb dat when he died and dey opened his head at the morgue dey found his brain hadn't never been used."

By reason of the unusual heavy demands on the jute supply of India, and on the Calcutta Jute industry, farmers are advised to order as soon as possible, all the new bags they will need for sacking grain and other products and in addition to prepare for use all old bags which can be made serviceable. Very large orders have been placed for sandbags for use in mining trenches, one English order alone being for 150,000,000 bags.

Phoning To A Train

A successful test of telephone communication between a train-despatcher's office and a moving train has recently been made by the Canadian Government. This has been accomplished before, but the present device embodies some features that are said to make usable in a practical way. The track is used as the conductor, and the electrical current reaches the moving train through its wheels. The test was made between Moncton and Humphrey's station, New Brunswick, on the Canadian Government Railways.

War Saving Stamps.

War saving stamps will, it is understood, be issued by the Government, although they may not be on sale for some little time. Such stamps are issued in the United States, where they have proved a great success. The stamps are purchasable for small sums and are then stuck in books. They are redeemable eventually at rates which return a profit to the purchaser When the stamps are issued Canada will have three methods by which her people can lend their money to the Government. There will be the coming flotation of war bonds in $50 and $100 units war saving certificates for smaller amounts purchasable at banks and post offices and the war stamps.

The Boy And The Picnic.

No more will the small boy come home from the Sunday School picnic and boast of the number of sandwiches he had. No more will he pick out the cake by the icing it has. The small boy is called upon to make sacrifice in the cause of the Allies as well as the grown ups—especially when it comes to the annual picnic. According to the food controller the regulations applying to eating houses will have to be observed. This applies particularly to meats and and to wheat products. Sandwiches may not be served at the noon meal. Pork, veal or roast beef may not be used at all on Wednesday and Fridays. Sandwiches may be served during the afternoon, but not more than two ounces of wheat product per individual may be used. Ham sandwiches can be served during the afternoon except on those days on which pork is prohibited. Not more than four ounces of ham per persons can be used. Where white bread is eaten it is necessary to provide substitutes also and when it comes to cake, the icing has to be cut out and mother has to go easy on the sugar and shortening for the pie. It's a hard world.

Splendid Crop Outlook

Up to the present time nothing has occurred to mar the splendid crop outlook of a month ago. In the West warmer weather followed a cold spell late in May, and the seeding of coarse grains was almost completed by the first of June. The outlook for fall wheat in Ontario is very poor but was never more promising for other grain. On the whole the indications are that the cereal products of the country will be larger than usual.—So says the Can. Bank of Commerce in its monthly letter for June.

THE TEA ROOM GIRLS

Scored A Big Success With Their Garden Party Last Friday Night. Over $325 taken in

The Lawn Party given at the Armoury grounds by the Tea Room Girls on Friday night was an unqualified success. The weather which had been threatening, proved to be ideal and the crowd turned out in numbers that were highly gratifying to the young ladies, who had gone to such trouble to make the affair a success. The total receipts were about $325. A dainty supper was first served in the large marquee. Afterwards there was a parade of autos and floats. The Hanover Band was in attendance and provided good music. Other features which helped to swell the receipts were the fortune-telling tent, in charge of Mrs. (Dr.) Farewell, and Mr. L. C. Benton's midway feature. "Hit The Kaiser."

The prize-winners were:—Best decorated autos, 1st., P. J. Schnlan, 2nd., Major Henderson. Best decorated floats, 1st., Pickaninnies, 2nd., Merchant of Venice. Best decorated rig, Kelly Lettner and Master Tuckey. Best decorated bicycle, Master Will King. The judges were:—J. H. McGregor, Arch. Tolton jr., C. J. Mickle, of Chesley, John Clancy, of Cargill.

The cut glass dish was won by Mrs. A. McCartney; Table cover by Mr. F. G. Eidt. The bag of flour auctioned off by Auctioneer Coates, was bought by Mr. John Rowland three times.

One of the best features of the evening was an informative speech by Mr. C. J. Mickle K. C. of Chesley. He explained the necessity for conservation of food in Canada and showed how it is worth while. He pointed out that while we in Canada are the world's greatest producers per capita, we also seem to have the greatest appetites, being the world's greatest consumers.

Matches to Burn

The tax on matches which came into effect on Monday found practically every merchant in Walkerton cleaned out of lucifers. There was a great run on Saturday, many citizens putting in a supply to last months, if not years ahead. Had the authorities announced the tax to come into effect at once, instead of giving the public two months notice, they would have secured a large revenue, which now has slipped through their fingers.

Mr. John Smith and family of Otter Creek had the unusual treat of having new potatoes on the table before the end of June. On Saturday last they had potatoes from their garden of a nice size about the size of a hen's egg.

Sprained His Ankle

Mr. Bassie Kirstine, of the South Line, had the misfortune to give his ankle a bad twist at a school picnic on Friday which will lay him off work for a short while. Bassie was running the bases in a lively baseball game when his right foot went into a hole. The ankle joint was twisted and one of the ligaments ruptured.

Autoists Beware

Chief Ferguson wishes us to give fair warning to all autoists that after this week, the drivers of all cars running without tail lights at night will be prosecuted. A Big Month

Inspector H. W. Elliot of the Children's Aid Society reported at the monthly meeting on Tuesday no less than 60 visits to children in various parts of the County during the month of June. A number of these visits were to investigate new cases. This is certainly getting over the ground. In fact, the month was the heaviest that Mr. Elliott has ever experienced in Children's Aid Work

$200 For Patriotic Work

Mr. L. C. Benton's Midway game "Hit the Kaiser" was again a popular feature at the Soldiers' Aid Garden Party last Friday night. Mr. Benton forgets for a couple of hours that he is a dignified furniture manufacturer and is heart and soul a typical Midway Spieler. During the past two years the patriotic societies of this town have benefitted by over $200 from this novel stunt which Mr. Benton has put on at several affairs

Case Is Being Considered

Mr. W. G. Eamer, of the Bank of Commerce, Walkerville, spent the week-end with friends in town. Mr. Eamer may have to report for military duty in spite of his lame shoulder which laid him off work for weeks at a time while he was located at Walkerton. His case is to be disposed of the coming week. Two of Mr. Eamer's brothers are on the firing line in France.

Where Rain Is Needed

Robert Reed, an old Bruce boy who is farming at Loverna, Sask. in renewing his subscription to the Telescope, writes:—"Weather very dry here, no rain this Spring yet. A lot of wheat isn't up yet and oats the same. Crops around here don't amount to very much this year. Farmers are plowing their wheat grounds for summer fallow. There will be hundreds of acres around here plowed down this year."

These Youngsters Can Run

At a school picnic held at Leach's Grove, Maple Hill, last Thursday a star feature was a race in which some well-known men competed. Brunt, the Hanover cattle king, won first place. Jim McWhinney looked like a winner until the big drover grabbed him and gave him a shove towards the rear. Mr. J. W. Adams of Hanover and Richard Burrell, of Maple Hill, also showed that they could use shank's mares.

Holds High Position

Mr. John Clancy and children, of Durand, Mich., were holidaying with the former's brother, Mr. R. J. Clancy. Mr. Clancy, who is a former Greenock boy, has made exceptional progress up the ladder in the G. T. R. service. He is now train-master at Durand, which is an important divisional point across the line. Before entering the railroad service, Mr. Clancy took a course in the old Walkerton Business College.

Besides his mother Gordon leaves one little sister Margaret. His father died about six years ago. Mrs. D. McKerracher is an aunt of the lad and on learning of the accident Mr. and Mrs. McKerracher went to Paisley Saturday night.

HERO WELCOMED HOME

Public Reception Given In Town Hall To Corporal Wilfred McKay And Cadet Oscar Schwindt

The usual public reception and presentation was tendered to Pte. Wilfrid McKay, who was recently invalided home after many months of active service, at the town hall on Thursday evening last. The attendance was fairly good, but the majority of those present were women and girls, a fact which was lamented by the Chairman, Mr. John Rowland and what he had to say about the manhood of Walkerton should result in a crowded house at the next and following receptions to our young heroes as they return from the battle-line. The presentation to Pte. McKay was made by Mr. Rowland and the address was read by Mayor Johnston. Although not able to use one of his legs and suffering from "nerves", "Biff.", with the fortitude of the true British Tommy bravely faced the audience and said he was glad to be home and glad to be in as good shape as he was for he had seen many who were a great deal worse than he. He thanked the people for their kindness and expressed his gratitude to the ladies of the different societies and the ladies of Knox Church for their parcels while Overseas.

The Preparedness League took advantage of the meeting to present Cadet Oscar Schwindt, who was home on last leave with the usual purse. In reply Oscar said he was glad to be in the service and would try and do his share towards bringing the war to an end.

Members of the Brant Preparedness League also met at the hall and presented Pte. Wilford Hornbach, a former Brant boy with an address and presentation. Mr. Frank Rennie read the address and made a few appropriate remarks while Mr. Robt. Richardson made the presentation.

The proceedings were interspersed by instrumental selections by the Misses Scanlon and Art. McCartney, solos by Misses Hilda Ermet and Vera Dippel and addresses by Mr. Norman Robertson and Rev. C. W. Cosens. The meeting was fittingly closed in prayer by Rev. J. W. Sanderson.

Sent Out West

Pte. Charlie Bryce writes his father Mr. Robt Bryce from Winnipeg that on landing at Halifax he was sent by the authorities to the point where he enlisted in the West. He is very anxious to get home after being so long on the sick list and will return to Walkerton after visiting his sister May, at Garvin, Sask.

Death of Mrs. Sheffield

There passed to rest at her home, Prince St., on Sunday morning, June 30th, Charlotte L. Odell, wife of Mr. E. H. Sheffield, in her 70th year. She had been bedfast for seven weeks, following years of constant ill-health. Mrs. Sheffield was born in the town of Brockville, where she resided until after her marriage. In 1879 she came with her husband to Walkerton where he conducted in partnership with his brother a large drygoods business for a number of years. Mrs. Sheffield was a woman of beautiful spirit and great strength of character. In the days before ill-health limited her activities she was diligent in all good work, such as searching out the needy in the community and helping them. She was also an active worker in the various societies of the Methodist church and in the W. C. T. U. She was very fond of music and before removing here was organist in one of the churches of her native town. Through long years of illness she never lost her cheerfulness and spirit of thoughtfulness for others. She leaves to mourn, besides her husband, an only surviving daughter, Miss Ethel, at home. Her brothers and sisters are:—F. A. Odell of Coaticooke, Que; Wheeler Odell, Montreal, Misses Eva and Nellie Odell of Brockville. The funeral, which was held on Wednesday afternoon, was largely attended. Rev. C. W. Cosens, pastor of the Methodist church conducted service. The pall-bearers were:—Messrs A. E. Sherrington, C. W. Cryderman, [illegible] Wilford, E. W. Cosens, John [illegible], Cecil, M. G. Dippell.

BRUCE COUNTY COUNCIL

The June Session of the County Council of Bruce was held at Southampton commencing on Monday, the 17th. instant. The Warden and all the members were on hand for a heavy session.

To a large extent it was a session devoted to County highways and deputations, and between the two Council was kept decidedly busy.

A large deputation of ladies waited on the Council asking that the grants to their Societies for War Work to be continued. In January the Council appropriated certain moneys for this purpose, but had no means whatever then of ascertaining about how much money would be required. They set aside what they thought to be ample to carry on the work until the June session, but the members of Council and the people generally had their eyes opened as to the wonderful extent to which this work was being carried on by the women of Bruce. The money expected to last until June did not live more than half the time. The result was many Societies were disappointed when they could not get further grants. Some ladies seemed to think the grant had been stopped, but it was a case of waiting until the Council had time to vote more money for the cause. Some of the delegates asked that the grant be made to each Women's Society without reference to moneys raised by such Society as at present, but council could not see any way of equalizing such a grant, some Societies having a larger membership and being more aggressive and doing more work than others. It was therefore decided to continue the grant on the same terms as before, that is dollar for dollar with the moneys raised and expended by each Society. The Council was firmly of the opinion that no money voted for war purposes was made free from criticism in its expenditure or did greater good to the boys at the Front than the moneys granted to the Women's Societies of Bruce.

Other matters concerning the War included a grant of $20,000 to the Y. M. C. A. for their work on the Front. On account of the charges made against the Y.M.C.A. the grant is not to be paid over until such charges are satisfactorily cleared up. Members did not seem to think much of the charges but did think it was only prudent to have them cleared up before payment of the grant.

The Bruce Patriotic League asked for a grant of $1,000 to assist in paying expenses in connection with the work they are doing arranging for returned soldiers. Council granted $500 to be paid as accounts are certified by the officers of the League.

A large deputation was present from Chesley asking that the Town be allowed the use of the land instruments returned by the Bruce Battalion until they were again required. It was pointed out that such instruments would be much better in use and taken care of than stored away where they would rust and otherwise deteriorate. Council agreed to allow Chesley the use of them, upon receiving a proper bond to return all such instruments in proper shape whenever called for by the Council.

The usual grants of $2,500 to Walkerton Hospital and $1,500 to Kincardine Hospital were made, and an extra grant of $250 was given Kincardine Hospital to assist in installing a water system.

The Council joined with other Counties in asking the Legislature to amend the Act so that a Township could make the poll tax from $1.50 to $5.00 instead of only $1.50 as at present.

The usual grants to High Schools and Continuation Schools were made.

A grant of $1,000 was made to the Salvation Army to assist in erecting the Rescue home in London.

The Equalization of the County remains the same as last year except the division between Carrick and Mildmay.

The Committee appointed to examine the bridge on the South Line, Kincardine Tp., asked to be assumed as a County bridge, reported against assuming it but recommended a grant of $700 to repairs which grant was made. A grant of $500 was made to Brant to assist in repairing a washout, and grants of $50 each were made to Hepworth and Lion's Head.

The Committee appointed to consider joint Children's Shelters and jails for two or more counties reported that they had met a similar Committee from the County of Huron and gone into these matters. As to the Shelter the joint committee did not think this possible and recommended no action. As to a joint jail the committee thought this could be worked out and recommended that a joint committee of the different Counties be appointed to consider it.

The question of County Highways was very prominently before the Council a large part of the time of Session, being taken up in committee of the whole, considering the question. Much of the difficulties arises from the fact that the Council thinks the question should be viewed from the standpoint of the County System as a whole, that is, that the system finally adopted should be such a one as is of most benefit to the whole County, rather than as to how it will affect the individual municipality. At the January session many requests were made for the addition of roads to the system as laid out originally. These, as well as the roads first adopted, were referred to a committee with instructions for the committee to go over the whole system and report to Council which roads they thought, after thorough and personal examination, should be included in the County system. This committee brought in a report this session and the discussion on this report occupied very much time but the subject was a long and important one.

The question of the provision for towns and villages brought on a long and warm discussion, and for some time it looked as though the representatives of these municipalities and of the rural municipalities would be unable to agree. Finally a sub-committee was appointed to deal with the matter, and they recommended a compromise between the claims of the two classes by which the outlying sections of roads in towns and villages, where farm lands adjoin these sections, should be taken in as a part of the system, and that there should be an annual grant to each town and village equal to 75% of the amount they are assessed each year for county highways, the money to be spent only on the street of the town or village which lies between the parts of the system ending at the limits of said municipality, and to be spent under the supervision of the County Highway Inspector. This was considered fair by all parties and was adopted.

After full discussion the changes made in the roads first adopted were as follows:—

(1) That one-half the boundary line between the Counties of Grey and Bruce be adopted as part of the system Grey County to adopt the other half of this line as part of the Grey system

(2) That the part of Road No. 10 in said By-law from the village of Tara to the North Gravel Road (boundary of Arran and Amabel) be taken from the system.

(3) The boundary from Lovat to the village of Paisley on Road No. 14, struck off.

(4) The Fifth Sideroad of the Township of Greenock was struck off.

(5) That part of Elora Road through village of Mildmay, struck off.

(6) That part of the 6th Con., Carrick from its junction with the Elora Road to the boundary of Carrick, was struck off.

(7) That part of the 15th Sideroad of Amabel lying north of the 10th Con. of Amabel, was struck off.

A number of applications to add other roads to the system were referred to a committee to examine and report.

The question of having some of the roads on the system adopted as part of the Provincial Highway System was referred to the committee to look into.

The Highway System is recognized by Council as a large and important one and it was felt better to go slowly and try to avoid expensive mistakes.

The County rate is high this year (8½ mills) raising $238,459.10. A large part of this is accounted for by war expenditure as follows:—Grants to Patriotic Fund, Red Cross, etc., $45,000; Provincial War Tax, $28,000; Grant to Y. M. C. A., $20,000; Ladies' Societies, $15,000 and the Good Roads, $45,000. So that the ordinary expenditure is well within that of other years.

Council closed a more than ordinary busy session on Friday, and adjourned to meet at Walkerton on December the 3rd next.

P. A. Malcomson,
County Clerk.

Merchants Bank Makes Another Brilliant Report

An increase in total assets mounting to almost twenty million dollars was the outstanding feature of the very gratifying report submitted at the annual meeting of the Merchants Bank of Canada on the fifth of June. This increase, which brings the assets of the Bank up to the notable figure of $240,937,541, was produced by an all-round increase in all branches of the Bank's liabilities to the public. Note circulation advanced nearly three millions, and non-interest deposits advanced seven and three-quarter millions, and interest-bearing deposits eleven millions, while balances due to banks and correspondents abroad were the only item to show a decrease. The general expansion was at the exceptional rate of 16¼ per cent. for the year. Deposits grew at the rate of over 21 per cent.

Another important feature of the report consists in the extent to which the Bank was successful in enlarging its current Loans and discounts in Canada. Thirteen and a half million dollars approximately was added to this class of assets in the twelve months ending April 30th., and in the speeches at the annual meeting it was made clear that this expansion was in the main a direct result of the increased volume of the commodities on which such loans are based. The assets have been rigorously scrutinized and the sum of $400,000 was appropriated out of profits for the Contingent Fund for the making good of any depreciation.

In spite of the expansion in current loans, the proportion of liquid assets to liabilities is still high enough for the most conservative requirements. The cash and readily realizable assets now total $57,667,481, against public liabilities amounting to $126,323,671, or in the proportion of 45.6 per cent. About 34 millions of these liquid assets is in the form of cash, bank balances and call loans, and the remainder consists largely of government securities of the Dominion, the Provinces and Great Britain. It will be seen that both by its assistance to the current trade and industry of the Dominion and by its support of the government finances of Canada and the Allies the Merchants Bank is performing important services towards the winning of the war.

Notwithstanding the greatly increased volume of assets, profits continue to be on a very moderate scale considering the real size of the shareholders' investment. The earnings for the year were $1 236,680, being 17.66 per cent. on the capital of $7,000,000 but the real investment includes $7,000,000 of Rest or Reserve Fund, to say nothing of the undisturbed profit balance, and the actual rate of earnings is therefore less than 8.8 per cent. Of all of this is available for the shareholders, since as already mentioned, an appropriation of $400,000 was made for contingencies and war taxes and the Officers' Pension Fund took between them another $130,000. After the payment of the 10 per cent dividend there was left a balance of 10,681 to add to the Balance carried forward.

Since the 1914 statement the total assets of the Merchants Bank have increased from $93,129,711 to $140,937,541, and this without any increase other in capital stock or Reserve Fund. For the time being owing to the large sums carried in liquid assets at low earning power, and also to the constant re-valuations of securities, the profits are not proportionately enhanced, but it is evident that with the return of more normal conditions this expanded business should be very beneficial to the shareholders.

A company has recently been formed in Japan to manufacture a substitute for celluloid out of soy-beans. This substitute is known as "satolite" and its manufacture will greatly enlarge the present market for beans. It can be manufactured more cheaply than celluloid and is said to have many advantages over celluloid.

PREVENT MILK SOURING

Production of First-Class Seed Potatoes Increases Yields.

Exercise Male Breeding Stock—The Bull, Stallion, Ram and Boar Must All Be Given Exercise If the Standard of the Herd Is to Be Maintained.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

It is one of the anomalies of life that the sources of our greatest pleasures and greatest means of good, may also be sources of life's greatest pains and most harm. Milk is a case in point. Milk is the best source of life's greatest good—proper and sufficient food. It may also be a cause of the destruction of life, because it may become the home or feeding ground of those death-dealing organisms which are now recognized as the cause of practically all deaths, except those due to accident or old age.

Fortunately we have discovered comparatively simple methods of combating the effects of what are called pathogenic (disease-producing) bacteria. These may be stated in a few short rules as follows:

1. Milk which is consumed in a raw condition must be drawn only from cows which are healthy.

2. As soon as the milk is drawn from the cow, it should be cooled to 60 degrees or lower, and be kept at that temperature until consumed.

3. All pails, strainers, dippers, milk bottles, pitchers, etc., which come in contact with the milk, must be thoroughly washed and preferably steamed, or be rinsed after washing in a chloride solution, which has been found to be one of the best germicides.

4. Milk should not be exposed to the air any longer than absolutely necessary, as this seeds the milk with a fresh lot of germs. This means the keeping of milk in a closed vessel and not in an open dish.

5. "Left over" milk from meals should not be put into the general supply, as this causes the whole lot to spoil.

6. "Left over" milk from the sick room should be pasteurized or destroyed, as it may spread disease.

7. Milk at all times and in all places should be kept "clean" and "cool."—Prof. H. H. Dean, Ontario Agricultural College.

Roguing Potatoes.

The average yield of potatoes per acre in the Province of Ontario for the past thirty-six years has been about 115 bushels. The yields vary greatly. In 1917 there were variations in Ontario from twenty-five or less up to seven hundred bushels per acre. People are realizing more and more that for high yields of potatoes conditions must be favorable. It is important to have good fertile soil well cultivated and to plant a liberal supply of seed of the best varieties at the proper time. Seed potatoes somewhat immature which have been produced in a cool climate, and which are comparatively free from disease, are apt to furnish seed of high quality. Even under these conditions it is well to carefully inspect the seed before planting and to thoroughly rogue the growing crop.

A potato field is rogued by removing the undesirable plants. A thorough roguing of the growing crop once or twice during the summer is one of the most effectual ways in ridding the field of a number of the potato diseases. This operation would also insure the immediate removal of the weak and unthrifty plants which are sure to produce undesirable seed. Potato growers sometimes go through their fields and remove all plants which are not true to type. Thorough roguing is one of the best methods of securing pure, healthy seed of high quality.—Dr. C. A. Zavitz, Ontario Agricultural College.

Exercise the Breeding Stock.

Exercise is essential for all male breeding stock. At certain seasons of the year it is an easy matter to arrange for ample exercise for the stallion, the bull, the boar, or the ram. At other times it is rather difficult and frequently little or no exercise is given, or if given too much freedom occasionally, harm to the sire is the result.

The bull should not be allowed to run loose in the pasture with the cows. In the first place it is a dangerous custom, as it gives abundant opportunity for the bull to attack a person unawares or where escape is difficult. Further, a record of the date of breeding of the cows cannot be kept and no herd can be handled to the best advantage without these records.

The main points to be observed in keeping a bull in good condition so as to retain his breeding powers are to avoid excessive use when young and to give plenty of exercise and a moderate ration when mature. A good boxstall, about ten by twelve feet, gives freedom indoors, and it is well to arrange for a strong paddock outdoors with convenient passage between the two. Two or more bulls of any age may be kept together if they be dehorned, and the advantage is that more exercise will be taken.

The stallion on a route usually gets plenty and sometimes too much exercise. At other times moderate work of the boxstall and paddock will suffice.

The ram running during the greater part of the year with the main flock gets plenty of exercise, especially if the breeder is aiming for a crop of strong lambs, and gets the flock outside practically every day during the winter.

The boar will do best on a grass plot with plenty of shade during summer, and in a pen provided with a small yard during the winter months.—Harry M. King, B.S.A., Ontario Agricultural College.

Recently bears have become numerous in the township and farmers have suffered severely through their flocks of sheep being attacked. The township council of Amabel offered a bonus of $10 for each bear trapped and there is likely to be a grand round up of the bears. Messrs Jos. Barclay of Mar, and John Rogers of Golden Valley are the first to claim the bonus, having captured two last week.

Major Jackson tells of the visit of one of the generals to the trenches on the end of the British line. The general who was a great stickler for discipline, said to the last man on the left: "Do you know, sir, that you're the most important soldier in the army?" Private Perkins murmured some modest rejoiner, but, as in duty bound, kept his eye glued to the periscope with its vista of No Man's Land. "Yes" resumed the general, "you're the last man in the last squad of the last platoon of the last company of the last battalion of the last regiment of the last brigade." After this impressive announcement the general turned on his heel and departed. Then the sergeant-major, lest Private Perkins should be puffed up by the suddenly conferred importance, added: "Yes, and if the army gets the command to form on the left you'll mark time for the rest of your bloody natural life."

When Your Hubby Comes Home From the War

"When the boys come home" will they find that the girls don't want them any more? asks William Purvis in the Toronto Sunday World. Or, to put it another way, are the women whose husbands have joined the army so happy and comfortable in their grass widowhood that they will miss this ball; war when it's all over and be sorry to find themselves fully married again, as it were?

As a mere male person I should never have dared to raise this question myself for fear of being accused of cynicism, had it not been raised already by a charming lady and the police court reports. Personally, I take a cheerful view of the outlook; I think that, generally speaking, Jeanne will be glad to see Jack back again, that Liza will welcome Thomas home with all due enthusiasm, and that Molly and Patsy will need reintroduction as well as Arthur Roberts used to tell us he needed a guide on his honeymoon.

Still, there are those police court reports of the men who came home and found they were not wanted: stories in some cases invested with a very terrible sort of tragedy.

Magie Amber was the customary London suburban girl. She was very pretty and very nice, and her widowed mother had exactly $1,000 a year coming in, and lived in a flat. Marie fell in love with a good-looking young fellow called Osborn Kerr who was a clerk in the city office of the Runaway Car Company. Osborn got $20 a week which looks a lot of money when you only have to pay $3.50 a week for board and lodgings out of it, and have the balance left for cigarettes, neckties and occasional evenings out.

Then they got married. Then three babies arrived in tolerably rapid succession. Somehow or other, when they had their pretty little maisonet all done up in cream and pink, and bought a lot of beautiful furniture on the hire purchase system, the Kerrs had forgotten all about the possibility of babies. For babies are expensive, even before they arrive; and three of them can make an awful hole in $20 a week.

The Money Question

Marie was a good manager, but she couldn't help asking Osborn for money very often, and she couldn't help losing her looks and getting grubby finger-nails. She didn't like doing either and she liked it less as Osborn grew more irritable and less considerate and stayed out oftener at night. But she was not completely fed up, altho she rebelled a little now and then, until one day she became convinced that her husband was no longer in love with her—at any rate, was very glad to get a way from her.

It happened like this. One of the Runaway travellers had a fatal accident and Osborne was given his job. It meant a jump from $1000 to $2500 a year and liberal expenses. It meant that for the first time in his life Osborn could afford to be extravagant. His firm sent him to America for a year, and Marie could see by the light in his eye and the spring in his step that he was delighted to go.

For a few minutes she was almost broken-hearted. Within six months (when her mother died and left her enough to do herself extremely well) she had picked up wonderfully. Osborn had been allowing her $1000 a year in his absence; and this went much farther than half the amount with his presence. She had found that you could be a very cheerful chirpy little grass widow with three dear little kiddies on $20 a week, and no dictatorial man to feed and generally do for. With $2000 (part of which was from her mother's estate) Marie was in clover.

It was an awful shock for Osborne when he came back and found that Marie had become familiar with the role of husbandless wife, that she preferred the freedom and privacy of the past year to the dull servitude of the years preceding it and following on her first year of matrimony. She was lovelier than ever, and felt, not without reason, that now she could withstand comparison with the gay, well-dressed women amongst whom formerly she felt dowdy as Osborn eyed their complexions and their clothes.

There are hundreds of thousands of women in this country today who are financially far better off as grass widows than they were as wives, who enjoy greater social freedom than ever before. Undoubtedly, here is by no means the least of those after-the-war problems with which solemn old gentlemen and almost as solemn young ladies persistently menace us. Marie came round all right at the finish, however; and I shrewdly suspect that Jeanne, Liza, and Molly will do the same. As Marie's mother used to ask: "What else can we women do my dear?"

Under the present labor conditions, says the Farmers' Advocate, it looks as though farmers would be obliged to go back to the eight-hour-day system. Eight hours in the morning and eight hours in the afternoon.

MILDMAY

Pte. Elmo and Jack Schnurr and Clarence Kunkel of Carling Heights, London, spent the week-end with friends in town and returned on Tuesday morning.

The weather for the Carrick Camp-meeting this year was not very pleasant but the crowd in the bush was very great. The services were well attended at all times. Dr. Staebler of Cleveland preached three inspiring sermons on Sunday and also preached on other days also. The automobiles were much in evidence also. The camp-meeting grounds and road were just black with cars, many of them coming from a distance.

Mr. Joe Reptke of Guelph visited a few days this week at Mrs. Mary Wendt's.

Schools closed here last Friday for the summer vacation.

Rev. A. W. Geild preached his farewell sermon here on Sunday morning and leaves this week for his new charge at Ponsonby five miles north of Guelph. Mr. Geild made many friends here who will greatly miss him. He is a fine likeable young man, and our young folks will lose a true friend, one who always looked after their best interests. We wish him success in his new charge.

Mr. Jac. Becker, our milkman, purchased a new Ford car from the local Garage and Gordon Dickison also purchased a car from his employer, Mr. Ed. Kalbfleish.

HANOVER

While on a fishing trip to the Kimberley Valley Mr. and Mrs. F. S. Mearns of Toronto, accompanied by Dr. and Mrs. Clarkson spent the week-end with Dr. and the Misses Mearns. Dr. Clarkson, who is Professor of Clinical Medicine in the University of Toronto was very much pleased with our progressive town.

The patriotic dance held in the roller rink under the auspices of the I.O. D. E. was a splendid success and the ladies will net a tidy sum as a result for the Red Cross. Guests were present from Owen Sound, Chesley, Holstein, Walkerton and the country districts, and everything from the one-step to the old-time reel was danced with enthusiasm. Kelly's orchestra of Owen Sound provided the music.

The Hanover R. C. church held another very successful social in the roller rink on Tuesday evening last when they cleared about $100—which is going some in times like these. The ladies worked very hard for the event, but when the receipts were counted they were a very happy, though tired, little crowd. The social was an enjoyable affair as usual. The Hanover band was on hand and provided excellent music.

Miss Laura McNab of Deaforo has secured a position in the Royal Bank at Hanover.

One of the finest specimens of brook trout caught in this vicinity this year was landed by Mr. Chris. Weis at the rear of the power house of the Portland Cement Co. It weighed 3¼ pounds and measured 18½ inches. It was certainly a beauty.

There was an incipient blaze last week at Mr. Thos. Beamish's, Marshall St., when the roof of the summer kitchen was partly burned. Fifty dollars would cover the damage done. The brigade turned out promptly.

Lieut. Norman W. Helwig, a former member of the 147th. Greys, has been officially gazetted as an observer in the Royal Air Force. Lieut. Helwig is a native of Hanover and was one of the most popular officers in the Grey unit. He served for some time in France with the 58th. Battalion before transferring to the air service.

DUNKELD

Cadet Harry Parker of a Western Company of the Royal Air Force is here on a visit to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. Parker, Elora Road.

Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Smith of Brantford were week-end visitors at the home of the latter's brother and other relatives in this vicinity.

Mr. William Barry was a business visitor in Toronto last week.

Mr. John Burns of Ottawa visited his mother here over the holiday.

Mrs. William Merchant returned Friday from the Toronto Hospital. Her many friends will be pleased to learn of her rapid recovery from a recent operation.

Mr. John Clancy spent the week-end with his mother. Mrs. M. Clancy on the town line. He was accompanied by his little daughter, Nellie and son, Jack, who will spend the summer vacation at Mr. Jos. Corrigan's.

Dr. Thomas O'Hogan, the celebrated Canadian poet, was a caller here last week.

Pte. Albert Ernst of London spent over the holiday at his home. Albert, as a soldier sure looks the part and woe to the enemy that should happen to question his ability as a target hitter.

Mrs. Dan Cassidy and little son, Jimmie of Riversdale, spent Sunday at the former's home here.

Mr. William Lambertus left on Saturday for Toronto where he will undergo a minor operation in St. Michael's Hospital.

Despite the inclemency of the elements a few journeyed to Port Elgin on Dominion Day.

Mr. Jos. Heba was handling the road grader around Elmwood and Paisley last week.

The Messrs. Schnurr of Kitchener motored here and spent the holiday with friends and relatives.

Mrs and Miss Schuler spent Tuesday in Enniskillen.

Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Clancy of town and Miss Mary Clancy motored up and spent over Sunday with friends.

Pte. Wilbert Hornbeck, whom we reported some time ago as having had both legs blown off at the Front was calling on old friends and relatives here last Wednesday, accompanied by his sister of Kitchener. Few returned men have seen as much fighting as Hornbeck, who apparently participated in the battle of the Somme, Vimy Ridge and several others. Neither can he boast of having come through all engagements unscathed for unfortunately he lost a limb at the Somme and also had the other badly crippled. He is also suffering from the effects of a gas attack besides a wound in the head the result of being hit by a brick during an enemy bombardment. He enlisted shortly after the outbreak of hostilities and went over with the 27 Battalion.

A Monster meeting of the local members of the United Farmers' Association is being held here tonight (Tuesday.) Some local agricultural critics will be the principal speakers of the evening and some rural topics will in all likelyhood be discussed and perplexing problems properly dealt with. The aim of this organization is to bring the agriculturists into closer co operation, thereby strengthening their efficiency o the present crisis and for the purpose of adopting a general system with which to cope with the labor scarcity and the present general war-time situation. Their efforts bid fair to meet with unbounded success.

SOUTH LINE

The folks of S. S. No. 4, Brant held their annual picnic on Friday afternoon and report a fine time. The weather was ideal, the crowd was big and everybody enjoyed themselves. A sports committee composed of Messrs. H. Traynor, S. Kirstine and John Tanner, looked after the games and provided lots of fun. The only incident to mar the affair was when "Bassie" Kirstine while performing stunts on the baseball field, had the misfortune to sprain his ankle. The tight-roping contest, which was a great feature, was won by Graeme Kirstine, Clayton Fortune taking second prize. The children took advantage of the occasion to present a handsome clock to their teacher, Miss Hamilton, who is giving up her position at holidays.

A Tale of Youth and Summer Time and the Baxter Family, Especially William

By

BOOTH TARKINGTON

Copyright, 1916, 1916, by Metropolitan Magazine.

"I don't know," said Jane. "He doesn't like mince or anything. He's seventeen years old."

After that the two stared moodily at the ground for a little while, chastened by the severe presence above; then Jane brightened.

"I know!" she exclaimed coolly. "Let's play callers. Right here by this bush'll be my house. You come to call on me, an' we'll talk about our children. You be Mrs. Smith, an' I'm Mrs. Jones." And in the character of a hospitable matron she advanced graciously toward the new neighbor. "Why, my dear Mrs. Smith, come right in! I thought you'd call this morning. I want to tell you about my lovely little daughter. She's only ten years old an' says the brightest things! You really must"—

But here Jane interrupted herself abruptly and, hopping behind the residential bush, peeped over it, not at Mrs. Smith, but at a boy of ten or eleven who was passing along the sidewalk. Her expression was gravely interested, somewhat complacent, and Mrs. Smith was not so lacking in perception that she failed to understand how completely—for the time being, at least—calling was suspended.

The boy whistled briskly "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," and, though his knowledge of the air failed him when he finished the second line, he was not disheartened, but began at the beginning again, continuing repeatedly after this fashion to effect mendicancy by patriotism. He whistled fondly. He walked with ostentatious intent to be at some heavy affair in the distance. His ears were red. He looked neither to the right nor to the left—that is, he looked neither to the right nor to the left until he had passed the Baxters' fence. But when he had gone as far as the upper corner of the fence beyond he turned his head and looked back, without any expression, except that of a whistler, at Jane. And then, still whistling "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," and with blank pink face over his shoulder, he proceeded until he was out of sight.

"Who was that boy?" the new neighbor then inquired.

"It's Ronnie," Jane said placidly. "He's in our Sunday school. He's in love of me."

"Jane!"

Again the outraged and ink stained countenance glared down from the window.

"What you want?" Jane asked.

"What you mean talking about such things?" William demanded. "In all my life I never heard anything as disgusting! Shame on you!"

The little girl from across the street looked upward thoughtfully. "He's mad," she remarked, and, regardless of Jane's previous information, "it is your papa, isn't it?" she insisted.

"No!" said Jane testily. "I told you five times it's my brother Willie."

"Oh!" said the little girl, and, grasping the fact that William's position was in dignity and authority negligible compared with that which she had persisted in imagining, she felt it safe to cast her upward gaze with disfavor. "He acts kind of crazy," she murmured.

"He's in love of Miss Pratt," said Jane. "She's goin' away today. She said she'd go before, but today she is! Mr. Parcher, where she visits, he's almost dead, she's stayed so long. She's awful, I think."

William, to whom all was audible, shouted hoarsely, "I'll see to you!" and disappeared from the window.

"Will he come down here?" the little girl asked, taking a step toward the gate.

"No. He's just gone to call mamma. All she'll do'll be to tell us to go play somewhere else. Then we can go talk to Genesis."

"Who?"

"Genesis. He's puttin' a load of coal in the cellar window with a shovel. He's nice."

"What's he put the coal in the window for?"

"He's a colored man," said Jane.

"Shall we go talk to him now?"

"No," Jane said thoughtfully. "Let's be playin' callers when mamma comes to tell us to go 'way. What was your name?"

"Rannie."

"No, it wasn't."

"It is the Rannie," the little girl insisted. "My whole name's Mary Randolph Elrsted, but my short name's Rannie."

Jane laughed. "What a funny name!" she said. "I didn't mean your real name; I meant your callers' name. One of us was Mrs. Jones, and one was"—

"I want to be Mrs. Jones," said Rannie.

"Oh, my dear Mrs. Jones," Jane began at once, "I want to tell you about my lovely children. I have two, one only seven years old and the other"—

"Jane!" called Mrs. Baxter from William's window.

"Yes'm!"

"You must go somewhere else to play. Willie's trying to work at his studies up here, and he says you've disturbed him very much."

"Yes'm."

The obedient Jane and her friend turned to go, and as they went Miss Mary Randolph Elrsted showed her uplifted eyes to linger with increased disfavor upon William, who appeared beside Mrs. Baxter at the window.

"I tell you what let's do," Rannie suggested in a lowered voice. "He got so fresh with us an' made your mother come an' all, let's—let's"—

She hesitated.

"Let's what?" Jane urged her in an eager whisper.

"Let's think up somep'n he won't like and do it!"

They disappeared round the corner of the house, their heads close together.

Upstairs Mrs. Baxter moved to the door of her son's room, pretending to be unconscious of the gaze he maintained upon her. Mustering courage to hum a little tune and affecting inconsequence, she had nearly crossed the threshold when he said sternly:

"And this is all you intend to say to that child?"

"Why, yes, Willie."

"And yet I told you what she said!" he cried. "I told you I heard her stand there and tell that dirty faced little girl how that idiot boy that's always walkin' past here, four or five times a day, whistling and looking back, was in love of her! Ye godly! What kind of a person will she grow up into if you don't punish her for havin' ideas like that at her age? I never heard of such a thing! That worm walkin' past here four or five times a day just to look at Jane! And her standing there, calmly tellin' that sooty faced little girl, 'He's in love of me.' Why, it's enough to sicken a man! Honestly, if I had my way, I'd see that both she and that little Freddie Banks got a first class whipping!"

"Don't you think, Willie," said Mrs. Baxter—"don't you think that, considering the rather noncommittal method of Freddie's courtship, you are suggesting extreme measures?"

"Well, she certainly ought to be punished!" he insisted, and then, with a reversal to agony, he shuddered. "That's the least of it!" he cried. "It's the insulting things you always allow her to say of one of the noblest girls in the United States—that's what counts! On the very last day—yes, almost the last hour—that Miss Pratt's in this town you let your only daughter stand there and speak disrespectfully of her, and then all you do is to tell her to 'go play somewhere else!'"

"You're all wrought up"—

"I am not wrought up!" shouted William. "Why should I be charged with"—

"Now, now!" Mrs. Baxter said. "You'll feel better tomorrow."

"What do you mean by that?" he demanded, breathing deeply.

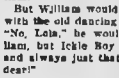
For reply she only shook her head in an odd little way.

"You'll be all right, Willie," she said softly and closed the door.

Alone, William lifted clinched hands in a series of tumultuous gestures at the ceiling; then he moaned and sank into a chair at his writing table. Presently a comparative calm was restored to him, and with reverent fingers he took from a drawer a one pound box of candy, covered with white tissue paper, girdled with blue ribbon. He set the box gently beside him upon the table, then from beneath a large fresh blotter drew forth some scribbled sheets. These he placed before him and, taking infinite pains with his handwriting, slowly copied:

Dear Lola—I presume when you are reading these lines it will be this afternoon, and you will be on the train moving rapidly away from this old place here farther and farther from it all. As I sit here at my old desk and look back upon it all while I am writing this farewell letter I hope when you are reading it you also will look back upon it all and think of one you called (alias) Little Boy Baxter. As I sit here this morning that you are going away at last I look back and I cannot recognize in my whole life which has been like this summer, because a great change has come over me this summer. If you would like to know what this means it was something like I said when John Watson got there yesterday afternoon and interrupted what I said. May you enjoy this candy and think of the giver. I will put something in with this letter. It is something maybe you would like to have and in exchange I would give all I possess for one of you if you would send it to me when you get home. Please do this for now my heart is braking. Yours sincerely,

WILLIAM S. BAXTER.
(ALIAS) LITTLE BOY BAXTER.



CHAPTER XXI.

The Last Sad Rites.

WILLIAM opened the box of candy and placed the letter upon the top layer of chocolates. Upon the letter he placed a small photograph, wrapped in tissue paper, of himself. Then with a pair of scissors he trimmed an oblong of white cardboard to fit into the box. Upon this piece of cardboard he laboriously wrote, copying from a tortured, inky sheet before him:

In Dream

By WILLIAM S. BAXTER.

The sunset light
Fades into night
But never will I forget
The smile that haunts me yet
Through the future four long years
I hope you will remember with tears
While far away on station
Whilst receiving my education
Though far away you seem
I were me then in dream.

He placed his poem between the photograph and the letter, closed the box and tied the tissue paper about it again with the blue ribbon. Throughout these rites—they were rites both in spirit and in manner—he was subject to little catchings of the breath, half gulp, half sigh. But the dolorous tokens passed, and he sat with elbows upon the table, his chin upon his hands, reverie in his eyes.

He was aroused from reverie too by wondering what Miss Pratt would think of him when she read "In Dream" on the train that afternoon. For reasons purely intuitive and decidedly without foundation in fact he was satisfied that no rival farewell poem would be offered her, and so it may be that he thought "In Dream" might show her at last in one blaze of light what her eyes had sometimes destinuly intimated she did perceive in part—the difference between William and such average, rather well meaning, fairly good hearted people as Joe Bullitt, Wallace Banks, Johnnie Watson and others. Yes, when she came to read "In Dream" and to "look back upon it all" she would surely know—at last!

I Would See Thee In Dream.

And then, when the future four long years—while receiving his education—had passed he would go to her. He would go to her, and she would take him by the hand and lead him to her father and say, "Father, this is William."

But William would turn to her, and, with the old dancing light in his eyes, "No, Lola," he would say, "not William, but Ickie Boy Baxter. Always and always just that for you, oh, my dear!"

And then, as in story and film and farce and the pleasantest kinds of drama, her father would say, with kindly raillery, "Well, when you two young people get through you'll find me in the library, where I have a pretty good business proposition to lay before you, young man."

And when the white waistcoated, white sideburned old man had, chuckling, left the room William would slowly lift his arms. But Lola would move back from him a step—only a step—and after laying a finger archly upon her lips to check him, "Wait, sir," she would say. "I have a question to ask you, sir."

"What question, Lola?"

"This question, sir," she would reply: "In all that summer, sir, so long ago, why did you never tell me what you were until I had gone away and it was too late to show you what I felt? Ah, Ickie Boy Baxter, I never understood until I looked back upon it all after I had read 'In Dream' on the train that day! Then I knew!"

"And now, Lola?" William would say. "Do you understand me now?"

Shyly she would advance the one short step she had put between them, while he, with lifted, yearning arms, this time destined to no disappointment—

At so vital a moment did Mrs. Baxter knock at his door and consoling reverie cease to minister unto William. He started, placed the sacred box out of sight and spoke gruffly.

"What you want?"

"I'm not coming in, Willie," said his mother. "I just wanted to know—I thought maybe you were looking out of the window and noticed where those children went—Jane and that little girl from across the street—Elrsted, her name must be."

"No; I did not."

"I just wondered," Mrs. Baxter said timidly. "Genesis thinks he heard the little Elrsted girl telling Jane she had plenty of money for car fare. He thinks they went somewhere on a street car. I thought maybe you noticed wheth"—

"I told you I did not."

"All right," she said placatively. "I didn't mean to bother you, dear."

Following this there was a silence, but no sound of receding footsteps indicated Mrs. Baxter's departure from the other side of the closed door.

"Well, what you want?" William shouted.

"Nothing—nothing at all," said the compassionate voice. "I just thought I'd have lunch a little later than usual, not till half past 1—that is, if—well, I thought probably you meant to go to the station to see Miss Pratt off on the 1 o'clock train."

"How'd you find out she's going at 1 o'clock?"

"Why—why, Jane mentioned it," Mrs. Baxter replied, "with obvious timidity. "Jane said"—

She was interrupted by the loud, desperate sound of William's fist smiting his writing table, as sensitive was his condition. "This is just unbearable!" he cried. "Nobody's business to refer from that child!"

"Why, Willie, I don't see how it matters if"—

He uttered a cry. "No! Nothing matters! Nothing matters at all! Do you s'pose I want that child, with her insults, discussing when Miss Pratt is or is not going away? Don't you know there are some things that have no business to be talked about by every Tom, Dick and Harry?"

"Yes, dear," she said. "I understand, of course. Jane only told me she met Mr. Parcher on the street, and he mentioned that Miss Pratt was going at 1 o'clock today. That's all I"—

"You say you understand," he wailed, "and you send Rannie 23 from closed door, 'and yet, even on such a day as this, you keep talking! Can't you see sometimes there's times when a person can't stand to"—

"Yes, Willie," Mrs. Baxter interposed hurriedly. "Of course! I'm going now. I have to go hunt up those children, anyway. You try to be back for lunch at half past 1, and don't worry, dear. You really will be all right."

He went to his mirror and, gazing long, long and piercingly at the William there limned, enacted almost unconsciously a little scene of parting. The look of suffering upon the mirrored face slowly altered. In its place came one still sorrowful, but tempered with sweet indulgence. He stretched out his hand as if he set it upon a head at about the height of his shoulder.

"Yes, it may mean—it may mean forever," he said in a low, tremulous voice. "Little girl, we must be brave."

And the while his eyes gazed into the mirror they became expressive of a momentary pleased surprise, as if even in the arts of sorrow he found himself doing better than he knew. But his sorrow was none the less genuine because of that.

Then he noticed the ink upon his forehead and went away to wash. When he returned he did an unusual thing—he brushed his coat thoroughly, removing it for this special purpose. After that he earnestly combed and brushed his hair and rolled his tie. Next he took from a drawer two clean handkerchiefs, put a little cologne upon one and placed the other, part of the colored border of the handkerchief being left outside in exhibition, and, with the other he carefully wiped his shoes. Finally he sawed it back and forth across them, and, with a sigh, languidly dropped it upon the floor, where it remained.

Returning to the mirror, he again

Art Schnurr Tells of His Trip From Southern States To Military Camp In France Giving Interesting Impression Along the Way

Somewhere in France,
May 29th, 1918.

Dear Friend Mr. Eedy:—

Your kind appreciation of my former letters to you, has influenced me in deciding to write this message relating to you some of my many experiences during the past months. What better material could a person desire for writing a letter than a trip similiar to the one I have just recently taken. Travelling about 6,000 miles on land and water over territory I had never before cast eyes on is a most memorable experience, one, a person seems almost preyed upon to divulge and having an illusion that I may be able to cause you interest and pleasure I will endeavor to arouse you into perusing my prose.

Perhaps I had better revert to the entraining at Camp Forrest, for truly to make the story complete that should be included. It was on a Sunday morning that our special train left that Southern training camp, a train consisting of almost a score of Pullman coaches. The route we travelled was as follows: Our first stop was made at that historical Southern city Chattenooga, but it was only a matter of a few minutes until we continued our journey, the delay seemingly being to allow us to bid adieu to Old Dixie and the "Sunny South." We steamed thru the eastern part of the State of Tennessee and it is a 100% butter looking farming district in that of the western part of the State which I viewed on the trip from Camp Sherman to Camp Forrest. At Knoxville, Tenn., we were permitted to leave the troop train and size up a bit of that city. It was during the hours of darkness that we travelled thru the State of North Carolina, so what I saw of that had better not be commented on.

The early daybreak of Monday shone upon us as our train speedily continued on the journey and our first inspiring sight was the beautiful sunrise between two peaks of those familiar "blue-ridged-mountains" of East Virginia. Nature's beauty seemed at its utmost as we gazed upon many miles of enjoyment as snow-capped mountains. We had which of stop at Roanoke, Va., when permission was granted to leave our train and trek up and we around a few of the city's streets, ten... city, attractive city of some fifty Mr. E... and inhabitants. I could write you pages of what happened and what we saw on the trip, but most of it is of secondary interest, so will refrain from relating same, other than to remark that the trip proved a memorable one for me and the people we passed on route, greeted and farewelled us most enthusiastically.

Our sojourn in Camp Merritt, was of only a few days duration, just long enough to complete preparations for embarking for overseas, and very few of us regretted when the time arrived to leave that camp, for it isn't near as comfortable and convenient as our two former American Camps we were at. The only pleasing feature of Camp Merritt is its being in close proximity to New York City, of which we took advantage as long as possible.

It was on a Monday morning that we cast a farewell glance over Camp Merritt and journeyed to our designated port and embarked on our transport. What a glowing narration I could give you of the wonderful "floating palace" we made the trip overseas on. But, not just a few words must suffice for the present. In the few words I desire to give you a conception of the boat, a monate , one of the largest afloat, equal in size, to almost three square blocks of the old town there, and higher than Walkerton's highest building. Were I privileged to disclose the name of it, you would immediately recognize the immensity of it, and if Walkerton had a population equal to the number of troops it will hold, both the Telescope and Times would be issuing flourishing dailies instead of weeklies. "A floating palace", what an appropriate name for it ere being converted into a troop-ship, for the luxurious staterooms and promenades, the beautifully decorated swimming pool, theatre and dining halls, and lounging apartments, the huge galley, and lastly the powerful engines and giant wheels, all add their quota to one's bewilderment. Just for humor sake, I'll be candid and admit that I got lost many times on it while making the trip across and spent hours in trying to locate myself, of course many others were equally as unfortunate.

A few remarks about my trip, naturally seems necessary to include and in doing this I'm going to quote a few extracts from my diary of my overseas trip.

Wednesday, 6 a. m.—The great size of this boat was the compelling factor in forcing it to float down the river and into the ocean as the tide receded, so shortly after daybreak the great engines and huge wheels were released and we slowly moved away from port, into the river. As we drifted down the Hudson, into the Atlantic, I gazed on scenery unapproachable. The immense New York harbor all the lofty skyscrapers of that world-famed city and other startling features, principally among which was in reality viewing the beautiful "Statute of Liberty," the gift of France to America and the symbol of Democracy for which the Allies are fighting with a spirit unfaltering.

Was quite fortunate in being attached to the mess detail, my duties consisting of supervising the meals at one of the many feeding stations. Thru this I secured a permanent pass to visit most every part of the boat, of which I missed nothing. Without a pass, one was deprived of a good many privileges I enjoyed.

Thursday morning a friend and I mounted to B deck where we refreshed on the sea-breezes and with the aid of our field glasses sighted a half dozen large vessels some miles distant. As I gazed over the continuous fields of water, I was seized with a most unusual feeling, no, not one of sickness, but really as if in a dream rather than actually experiencing what was happening. The water was quite calm, the boat cut its way thru the water swiftly and everything seemed ideal as we leisured away on deck.

Thursday evening attended a movie show on F deck, movie hall.

We are being fed real well, the meals varying with the following victuals: Potatoes, beef and pork, vegetables, puddings and pies, coffee, butter and bread, oranges and apples and all one desires to eat.

Each day we received the wireless reports of all the latest war and general news and baseball games.

Saturday we passed thru the only semblance of a storm, a strong wind with a few rain-showers caused the sea to roll some, but found no trouble in braving it on a boat such as this one.

Monday after partaking of dinner I strolled to a most comfortable spot on C deck where I seated myself and basked in the sun-shine. Water alone does not arouse one with encouraging thoughts, so I indulged in an aftermath of the past months. Recollections of those old scenes, friends and folks around Walkerton were innumerable and I enjoyed several hours of diversion in thoughts of you all.

Had a very pleasant chat with a couple of nurses amongst the many on board, and it truly felt good to speak to some of the "fair-sex" after a couple months' isolation from them.

Tuesday evening a score or more of our Company congregated on B deck, where we leisured away the evening hours by singing most every song we knew, in real Caruso melody. The day had been an ideal summer one on water, with one exception, which was a small rain-shower, it really adding pleasure rather than displeasure to the day's travel. This pleasure was in the form of a beautiful rainbow replete with all colors and occuring just at a most brilliant sunset. It shone with a clear reflection on the blue sea-waters, which caused many to ejaculate.

We were treated to band music most every day by one of the different bands.

Germany's submarine warfare, appeared as a myth as far as we were concerned, for not a one was visible to us. Even at that, though, a happy relief came to us when we sighted land, early one morning. European land, of course, though we hadn't the least idea where we were at. T was while the boat anchored out in the bay for hours, that we attained full advantage of the decks and studied the quaint old scenery about us, very pretty in some respects but peculiar looking in others. Around and before us were boats of every description, even to submarines of which I obtained my first realistic impression. All these and the scenery enlivened our interest until our turn came for disembarking.

One of France's oldest camps was provided as a home for us when we arrived in this Republic. The camp seemed to show its age in every respect too, for the mere mention that Napoleon the Great had built and obtained valued service from it in his historical days, assures you that the comforts and conveniences there were never meant for the "Sammies" of 1918 accustomed to the best of training camps America could build. We did find a few features of historical interest there, though, which eased our discomfort somewhat. Our abode there lasted but a few days, when we again entrained and experienced a three-day trip thru France.

My first impressions of the French people, their homes, buildings, etc. were not very laudable, but one should hardly draw conclusions from the peasantry class, and that is the class we found inhabiting this first district.

Traversing some seven hundred miles of this country fully convinced me of its beauty. Finer and cleaner looking farms I never viewed before. Long stretches of fields, with scarcely a fence around but in many cases well trimmed hedges. Large white-stone houses and barns set off symmetrically by the back ground of fields of green crops in advanced stages of maturity. Very few forests or bushes and very clean appearing crushed-stone roads. The villages of which there is one every few miles, the numerous large cities and towns thru which we journeyed contained their quota of attractiveness as well. Most every building of white-stone, streets very narrow, peculiar looking vehicles and the modes of the people, were very noticeable. Predominating all else in these places was the large stone-church, situated in most cases on a hill, of unusual architecture, and a striking indication of their interior beauty. Even the smallest village did not lack its church, and I realize now about how beautiful that wonderful Rheims Cathedral must have been ere Germany committed her atrocious bombing.

Twould hardly do for me to overlook the railroads here, after experiencing the trip we had on them. The engines are surely "dinkeys" in comparison to those of your roads there, though they have a few larger ones near Paris, the box-cars aren't half the size I was so accustomed to seeing while the coaches sure look like a joke, they have no rear entrances, but side doors and a door to every seat, appearing more like one of Toronto's summer street cars. It's surprising how they make as much speed as they do with their trains, but they get to their destination in quick time. Their pullman and dining cars are much better appearing and more comfortable.

When we detrained, we had a march of some five miles and finally landed in this village, where we have been billeted ever since. Our quarters are pretentiously cupied buildings thruout the village, in some cases quite comfortable in others not quite so pleasing. The village is about the size of Cargill and reminds me a good deal of that place in regard to layout. There's a pretty little river flowing thru it, also has a railroad, glass factory and flour mill, the two latter doing little or nothing since the war broke out. The little stone church occupies the centre of the village and like in most every village in this country is the principal object in the place. Have been told that it was built in 1100, and on my numerous visits to it, I am fully convinced it is all of that age. The pastor is surely a typical "Little French Priest." Aristocracy seems to hold its own here very well for one wealthy family owns practically every building in the village and also the farm lands for miles around. The nearest fair-sized place is five kilometres away and we are only a few hours ride from Paris.

There are very few men left here and they are mostly all aged ones. Nearly every family has one, two or three men in the army, and in many cases the womenfolk have moved together, causing many houses to be unoccupied. They seem to live on soup, bread and wine and are rationed by the Government in most everything. They dress very neatly, though not lavishly. A few of the Mademoiselles keep us informed that France is the style creator for habilliment, and there are a few oli (pretty) ones in this burg too. The people appear in very good spirits, though having passed through four years of depression, they offer a welcome smile to us Americans whenever we meet them. The contrast in Bulgets has proven the most displeasing feature here, and prevents us from conversing with these people as we would like. Some of us have a French-English vocabulary and by means of it we are able to make them understand a little. Our system has been to look up a word we wish to say, repeat it and then ejaculate some what. We have learned a few of the common phrases such as bonh jour Mademoiselle (good day Miss) and komonh vous portay vous (how do you do) so whenever we exclaim these, they believe we can parler Francais and begin to rhyme off a streak. Our only resort is to pull out our vocabulary. Gee, it's awful to meet one of these young French girls and not know how to converse with her. Yes I have had the experience, and you would have laughed yourself into a dilemma could you have seen me.

The change from camp to village life is some contrast, but I myself enjoy it. We do most of our drilling in adjacent fields and on the country roads. The drilling is much more interesting than what we have previously had and we are fast getting into shape to put the cleaners on the Hun. We have during the past week done a great deal of practice shooting with our machine guns, and it's fine sport. If we ever get near the Kaiser it will be "good bye, Old Willie."

The fellows are all in find spirits, we are being treated as well as possible. We enjoy our leisure hours indulging in baseball, football, etc. With me writing proves a diversion. Co. "C" pride themselves on having the finest staff of officers to be had, and I'll go one better and say they can't be equalled.

At times I actually don't feel that I am in France. I have enjoyed the very best of spirits right along and have not worried as to future days. Was a bit lonely for mail and those much sought for home papers, but now that the mail is arriving I feel quite contented. The Telescope and Times of April 11th reached me yesterday and though six weeks late they proved interesting.

My fond hopes are that the censor overlooks the length of this letter, finds nothing in it to detach and that it reaches you just as written. I trust my efforts to make it interesting for you are realized. My assurance to you, Mrs. Eedy and all my friends there is that I many times recall pleasant thoughts of you all and entertain one fond desire that soon the world carnage will end successfully for the Allies and all will be able to turn to their loved ones there.

With very best wishes to all, I remain ever

Your friend,
Art.

WITH THE AMERICAN FORCES

George Pattullo (he is one of the Woodstock Pattullos) writing in Saturday evening Post, tells of two incidents connected with aerial warfare. Seven of them, he says, were sitting in at a game of poker in an American camp. "I had," he says, "walked round my chair three times, with the happy result of seeing a pair finally, and had just said to the dealer, 'Gimme three off the roof,' when suddenly we caught the unmistakable hum of an airplane motor. Everybody paused; for a moment the dealer's fingers grew stiff and he hesitated. Then he smiled and did his duty; for the noise was a steady cheerful purr, which is the sound a French machine makes. We all leaned back comfortably and gave a tilt to our cigars. The hum increased in volume and passed overhead. It was as beautiful as Handel's Largo for our gallant allies were off to bomb the blue blazes out of the dirty boches and we wished these daring airmen a safe journey and a bull's-eye with every shot."

But there was another occasion in which the noise overhead came, not from French, but from German air craft. And in the midst of it one of the meaningless patients down the hall began to rave.

"Let's go home!" he wailed. "Let's go home!" His voice sank to a pitiful moan. "Let's go home!"

"Poor, poor fellow!" says Pattullo. "I heartily seconded the motion, for all the while the raiders were dropping their terrible explosives."

Mr. Pattullo describes the march of one American unit in the war zone. "Despite the long and punishing trip, and with packs weighing more than seventy pounds to carry, they did twenty-four miles before five o'clock that night," he says. "A few fell out, of course, either with sore feet or because they were all in, but these were less than three per cent. of the total number; and the others were able to 'Boy howdy!' on another at the finish."

No Licenses For Garden Parties

Food regulations and just how far they go have been causing more or less vexation to societies, fraternal and church, which have been planning the usual summer Lawn Socials and so on. The question has been taken up with the authorities at Ottawa, and as a consequence they have given out a definite ruling that no license is required for serving refreshments at lawn socials, tea-meetings, public or private luncheons, picnics, fairs, lodge, club or fraternal meetings and such like functions. The board, however points out that refreshments served at such functions should be kept to the spirit of food conservation and should be strictly to the limits placed upon public eating places.

The Food Board regulations are constantly making it more difficult for retailers to carry on business and a large number of the smaller ones are being forced to shut up the shop.

Taught Three Generations

Speaking of Walkerton's new Public School Principal the Paisley Advocate says:—Mr. Rankin has a length of experience in public school teaching which spans, we are safe in saying, over three generations, as some of those whom he first taught are now grandparents of public school children. He is a graduate of Paisley public school, his student days here dating back to that period when men of mature years and full beards, who had left the farms to seek the paths of learning, occupied seats at the feet of such master instructors as Principal McKellar, McIntyre and McKee. Educationalists of the calibre of these mentioned are nowadays at the head of our larger institutions, such as the collegiate institutes or big town high schools. There were not so many frills to the public school course in those days, but there was such a thorough grounding in the work taken up that those, who like Mr. Rankin are still physically fit, are still able to hold their own with the more modern pedagogue.

A SAD FATALITY

Mr. Rudolph Misch, Fell From Roof Of Barn Receiving Injuries From Which He Died

A sad fatality occurred at the farm of Amos Pletsch, west of the G. T. R. Station on Thursday night. Rudolph Misch, along with several other employees of the Knechtel Furniture factory had volunteered to help Mr. Pletsch shingle his new barn. Mr. Misch was working on the roof near the top, when by some means he slipped and rolled off the high roof. As he fell he grasped a bundle of shingles which fell with him. His body struck in the branches of the tree and then crashed to the ground. When his companions hurried to the scene they found him in a dying condition. He was conscious for a few minutes but before reaching the hospital, to which he was hurried, he lapsed into unconsciousness and expired the following afternoon at three-fifteen o'clock. It was found that his left arm and left leg had been broken by the fall and there was severe concussion of the brain. The sad and sudden taking off of one just in the prime of life awakened the deepest feelings of sympathy for the stricken family. The deceased, who was in his 62nd year, was an almost lifelong resident of this neighborhood. He came at the age of seven years with his parents to Carrick, later settling on the Durham Road West, Brant. He was a cabinet maker by trade and before coming to Walkerton eleven years ago he worked at his trade at Hepworth and Wiarton. Ever since coming here he had been in the employ of the Knechtel Furniture Co. The deceased was a quiet good living man of good principles, respected and liked by neighbors and fellow workmen. He was a member of the Lutheran Church, and a teacher in the Sunday School, for a number of years. His wife, who survives him was formerly Miss Anne Ahrens of North Brant. He leaves one son, Aaron, a student at Stratford Business College, and two daughters Mrs. Clarence Kreuger of Walkerton and Miss Luella at home. Louis, Albert J. and Adolph Misch are brothers and Mrs. (Bertha) Toltz of Carrick is an only sister. The funeral was held from his late residence, Ridout St., on Monday afternoon, to Walkerton Cemetery. Rev. H. R. Lamach, pastor of the Lutheran Church conducted the services. There was a large attendance at the service, including his fellow-workmen at Knechtels, the factory having shut down for the occasion.

Can't Get the Goods

Carmenal, rejemeh and other substitutes which the Food Board orders the public to use after July 1st, are not to be had in Walkerton. A number of dealers have their orders in but these lines are scarce and hard to get. Mr. Harry Pletsch of Walkerton Flour Mills, has had a large order in for some time but has not yet got the goods. At prevailing market prices the substitutes will sell considerably higher than wheat flour, Mr. Pletsch states. Under the circumstances, the Food Board will have to go slow in enforcing the order to use substitutes.

OLD RESIDENT PASSES

Death of Mrs. R. H. McKay Removes a Kind Motherly Soul Whose Memory Will be Treasured By Family and Friends

The death occurred at the family home, Young St., Walkerton, on Thursday morning July 4th., of Flora Morrison, beloved wife of Mr. R. H. McKay, in her 78th year. Since taking a stroke about two years ago, Mrs. McKay's health had been poorly and shortly after a final stroke on Sunday afternoon of last week, she lapsed into a quiet sleep from which she passed peacefully away four days later.

Mrs. McKay was born at Scourie, Sutherlandshire, Scotland, being the daughter of Donald Morrison, merchant, of that place. When she was seven years old her parents and family came to Canada, settling in the Township of East Nissouri, Oxford County just across the highway from the famous Scottish township of Zorra. Her husband's people settled in the same neighborhood. In fact by a strange coincidence Mrs. McKay and her husband were born in the same year, in the same town of Scourie. The families were well-acquainted, came to Canada in the same boat, and settled in the same neighborhood in East Nissouri. Mr. McKay went as a youth to the nearby city of London to find employment and as it was there in 1866 that they were made man and wife. The young husband was at that time the foreman in a fanning mill factory, and just a couple of years later they came up to Walkerton. The Queen's Bush was being rapidly settled and Mr. McKay started a factory to make fanning mills for the incoming farmers. There was but little of the present town of Walkerton standing at that time, the south ward being practically all bush. In 1872 Mr. McKay erected a house on the lot where the family residence now stands, opened up McKay's subdivision which takes in several residential blocks in that part of the town.

With a large family growing up around her, Mrs. McKay's activities centred in the home. Hers was a personality that radiated kindness and good cheer, making home the most attractive spot on earth for her devoted family and a visit to her hospitable fireside an inspiration to her friends. The patience and beautiful strength of character shown in trouble and family bereavement, was still evident in her last illness. Although suffering greatly and being practically deprived of speech the last two years, a very close friend said that during all that time she had never made the slightest murmur or complaint. Her lovely spirit was manifest to the last.

Besides her husband, the surviving members of the family are:—Geo. D., William R. of Walkerton, and John A. of Calgary; Mrs. Wm. Lumsden of Belleville; Mrs. W. J. F. Ross of Forest.

Mrs. Janet Coates of Winnipeg and Mr. William Morrison of London, both formerly of Walkerton are the only surviving sister and brother.

The funeral was held on Saturday afternoon from the family residence to Walkerton Cemetery, Rev. Thos. Wilson conducting the service. A large number of old friends from town and country were in attendance. The floral tributes were exceptionally beautiful, including wreaths from a score or more of friends from out of town.

The pall-bearers were:—Messrs. D. McKechnie, D. McKerracher, Nevin Robertson, H. McKerracher, J. G. Hibbert, H. M. Lay.

Friends and relatives present from outside points included:—James Eagleman, Goderich; William McKay, London; Mr. and Mrs. Frank Morrison, Blythe; William Morrison, London; W. J. F. Ross, of Forest; Wm. Lumsden, Belleville; Hugh McKerracher and son James of Paisley. Mrs. Neil Morrison and Miss Flo. Morrison of Buffalo.

LAZINESS INCREASES HIGH COST OF LIVING

"Cash and carry" milk is educating people to shop instead of telephoning orders, remarks the New York Commercial. Loose milk is sold under state regulations to those who carry it away for three cents a quart less than the same milk delivered in bottles, and thousands of people are taking advantage of the difference in price. If similar concessions in the retail prices of other necessaries of living were made the cost of living would be greatly reduced and tradespeople would still make fair profits. Costs of delivery and losses on returned goods are heavy tolls upon retail trade. Those who pay cash and carry home their purchases should receive a reasonable rebate. Those who ask a retailer to deliver a pair of gloves, a can of baking powder, or a loaf of bread should pay for the service, but those who are not ashamed to carry small packages should not have to pay the cost of delivering such goods to those who are too vain or lazy to help themselves. It is more trouble to carry milk home than to handle any other commodity, and the "cash and carry" experiment proves that the system can be extended to other things.

A FARMER FEEDS A LOT

(Weekly Sun)

What value is a man on an Ontario farm to supply feed for others? In the recent meeting of the U. F. O. at Toronto it was stated that a man on an Ontario farm supplies sufficient food to feed from 75 to 100 people. This estimate was, if anything, on the conservative side.

One of the leaders of the movement two years ago took long enough off from his work to figure up what his production amounted to, and when he was through had come to the conclusion that he produced enough to feed 300 people and to clothe 60 or 70 others—doing this with the help of two men in the summer and one in winter. (He failed to show how the 230 others were to be clothed, but perhaps they would move to a warmer climate where a minimum of clothing is required!)

Among the articles produced on the farm in question were 60 hogs; 20 fat cattle, weighing about 1,200 each; 40 fat lambs; close to 1,000 bushels of wheat, $600 worth of cream, and 500 pounds of wool.

When he was telling this another director told of selling more beef cattle from his own farm than the people of Clinton, a town of 2,300 could consume.

A third man in the room told that in their beef ring it was estimated that an 800-pound steer, live weight, would run 20 average families for a week.

LETTER FROM FRED JEWELL

Mrs. Jewel had two letters last week from her son, Fred, who is still in the hospital at Bexhill-on-Sea, Sussex, England. Fred writes:—

Dear Mother:—

I received 8 letters from you to-day and was glad to hear you are well and the rest of you too. I got them in one bunch but they had been over to France and came back again to me, here. Well, I am feeling just the same but I hope you are well and happy. I don't think I will get home this year, for this war is not finished.

June 12th, 1918.

I received your letters and also the money you sent to me today. I got three letters today that were sent by the bunk they were dated Feb. 20, 1918; Jan. 28, 1918; Dec 27, 1917. These all came in one bunch.

I don't know what is going to turn up yet, but I am feeling just about the same. The weather over here is just like summer these days. I do wish this war was over so I could come home to see you and all of my friends again. It is now almost three years since I left home a long time too. It seems like five years to me. I got a good number of letters from Mabel, two at the same time as yours, and also some from my friend about the town. Would you tell Simon Small to drop me a line and let me know how he made out on his trip. There is not a boy in this camp I know from home yet, but I got a letter from Ernie Cartwright some time ago. He is well and back in the trenches again. I will write and let you know what I get on my board, when I leave here. I will let you know where I have gone to. Well, dear mother, I hope this letter finds you well and happy. So good-bye

Fred.

OUR WESTERN LETTER

In April the experts were sending bulletins to the East saying that the season in the West was a month ahead and this year's wheat crop was assured and would be the greatest on record etc. etc. and that before a lot of the grain was ever sprouted. I don't think you will find many of those experts shouting off now. The season certainly opened early and during March and April the weather was ideal. Then in May it turned cold. We had several days of snow and one week it froze hard nearly every night. It looked more like late Fall than the middle of May. Then we had two or three weeks of fine weather and the grain came on with a jump. On June 18th. we had the heaviest and longest lasting hail storm I have seen. Next day the fields looked as if millions of young hogs had been driven over them. This has set back the grain but not otherwise damaged it. Wherever I have been the wheat looks fine, oats and barley also look well but are away behind. A number of people are complaining of damage done by cut worms. One man near here has 80 acres of wheat completely destroyed, he has resown it with barley. This last week has been cold with cold showers from the North, it feels as if it would like to snow. The season now is as backward as any I have experienced but I can say that in the eleven years I have been here I have never seen a crop failure in this section. Usually the wild rose bushes are pink with blossoms this time of year, at present you will only find an odd blossom opened yet. Everything looks like a good crop of hay. A number of farmers here have been badly off for help for the past three years or so their sons having gone to the towns where big wages obtained. When conscription came in these boys hiked for home and got exemption in the ground that they were necessary on the farm. I know one man whose farm has been rented for the past five years because his son wouldn't stay at home and he got him exempted on these grounds. There have been lots of cases of hardship, of men called who were really needed. I think this false swearing and obtaining exemptions where they weren't deserved has given the authorities an idea that all farmers are liars, as some one had to go, often the wrong man was picked.

Raising Poultry

"What," said the lady who does her own shopping, "is the price of these chickens?"

"A dollar and and a quarter apiece, ma'am," replied the market woman."

"Did you raise them yourself?" asked the lady.

"Oh, yes, ma'am. They was only $1.10 last week."—Youth's Companion.

The Women of France

In France recently figures showed that there are now 475,000 women at work in munition factories at $2.00 per day plus 50c from the Government with 25c in the army. Thrift is as strong a principle with French women that French banks are carrying larger deposits than ever before, despite the fact that $18,000,000,000 towards the finances of the war came from popular subscription.

PUBLICITY
Knows No Seasons

ADVERTISING, in spite of all the hard knocks it has received, continues to grow each year. It is essential. It is the power behind the selling organization. Take away the element of advertising and the business world would lie stagnant and at a standstill.

AND advertising knows no seasons—it just keeps everlastingly at it: the most efficient and persistent salesman on our payroll.

AFTER advertising all through your "regular season" you are losing mighty value publicity by discontinuing your "ad." People have now become accustomed to your store news and the time is coming when they are going to need something exactly in your line.

YOUR ad. is a constant reminder—if it appears regularly. The sign above your door is seen only by people who pass your store—an advertisement in The Walkerton Telescope—the paper that goes home, is seen and read by the majority of the people in Walkerton and vicinity each week. So don't make the mistake of advertising just in your particular "season"—keep your name before the public the year round.

BRUCE W. C. T. U.

Held Their Annual Session at Teeswater—An Interesting and Profitable Session

The thirtieth Annual Convention of Bruce County W. C. T. U. met in Knox Church, Teeswater, Wednesday morning, June 26th, at 9.30.

The executive met for business and decided to ask the County Council for a grant to help their donations to the Red Triangle. The appointment of Resolution and Plan of Work Committee strongly advocated Women Trustees in rural communities, on the ground that the teachers should not have to speak of immoral or questionable subjects to the principal but to a woman trustee. In the reports from different branches of work, Mrs. John Clark gave a splendid paper on Anti-Narcotics bringing to the notice of the women that Essex County the farmers are increasing their acreage of tobacco and dropping wheat so great is the demand and good prices for this deadly weed. Mrs. Halliday of Chesley spoke on 'Citizenship' touching on moral education and increasing the voting power of women.

Scientific Temperance by Mrs. Stauffer, Walkerton, showed the benefit it would be to the children to have this subject taught in the schools.

Fairs by Mrs. Bonnet, Wiarton, showed the practical benefit to the children thru the seeds and potatoes given them and the thought of trained agriculturalists thru rural fairs was well handled.

The convention decided to approach the county council and ask that body to treat them as they do other organizations.

At the public meeting on Wednesday evening, Rev. W. A. Bradley occupied the chair. Rev. C. Durant conveyed the welcome of the municipality in the absence of the rector. A good musical program was provided by the united choirs of the Presbyterian and Methodist churches. An excellent address was delivered by Mrs. Stevens of Toronto, provincial president.

The officers for the following year are as follows: President, Mrs. B. C. Ashcroft, Wiarton; first vice-president, Mrs. F. F. Moore, Teeswater; second vice-president, Mrs. William Halliday, Chesley; recording secretary, Mrs. A. B. Stauffer, Walkerton; treasurer, Mrs. H. B. Putnan, Paisley; corresponding secretary, Mrs. J. G. Simpson Wiarton.

The honor roll of mothers, members, of the W. C. T. U., who have sons at the front was read. It was a long roll.

Flashes From The Convention

County Supt. of Anti-Narcotics deplored the fact that two of our Ontario Counties are using so much land in growing tobacco that might be used to grow food stuffs.

Upward of one thousand dollars was raised for free drinks and comforts for the soldiers at the front and more is still being collected.

Walkerton sent a bale of clothing to the Indians valued at forty two dollars.

Mrs. Stevens, Provincial President not only instructed but enthused all those who were privileged to hear her.

Teeswater supplied us with excellent music. They certainly have fine talent and were more than generous with their hospitality and we look forward with pleasure to a return to that village.

LAW APPLIES TO PICNICS

Complete information relative to the new food regulations, which are now in operation, have been received by Mr. Robt. Goode, Chairman of the Local Food Board.

Under the new regulations the law governing the serving of food in public eating houses applies to lawn socials, bazaars, tea meetings, public luncheons, dinners, picnics, fairs, exhibitions, lodges, clubs, etc But it is not necessary to secure a license for certain gatherings at which food or refreshment is to be served to 15 or more persons other than the members of the family giving the affair. They include private and semi-private luncheons, dinners, parties and picnics But the law demands that the regulations governing the serving of food must be adhered to.

Under the old regulations the hour for the evening meal was from six to nine o'clock, but under the new regulations it is from 5.30 to 8.30 o'clock. The daylight saving measure has been responsible for the change.

In eating houses beef and veal shall not be served except at evening meal on Sunday, Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday, except when stews made from shucks, brisket, plates, flanks and left-overs are served. Such stews may be served at any mid-day meal.

Bread as a garnish, except under poached eggs, is prohibited.

Not more than a half ounce of butter or oleomargarine shall be served to any one meal, unless more is requested, when not more than an additional half ounce shall be served.

Town and District

Dandelion wine is to be put under the ban.

The housewife is to have all the sugar she wants for preserving. That is, of course, if she can pay for it.

A strike of 30 moulders occurred at the Western Foundry, Wingham, last week. It is understood the difficulty is over the question of the open shop.

The country will soon be a lap ahead of the villages, towns and cities in the race for automobile ownership. Of the 78,435 cars in Ontario, 47,337 are owned by the rural people, and 31,008 by the townsfolk.

Late society news from Orangeville, as reported in the Sun: Miss Gordon and Miss Cora Hayward underwent operations for the removal of bunions recently, and both young ladies are getting along nicely.

Mrs. Wm. McDonald of Chesley, wife of the local member for North Bruce, was very badly burned last week while cleaning a pair of gloves with gasoline. Her condition is still critical, but there are good hopes for her recovery.

In the restaurants in Roumania you can get nothing but beans to eat—there are seven meatless days a week No stores are open because there is nothing to sell in the way of clothing. Ever since the beginning of the war the import of cotton has ceased. The Germans occupied two-thirds of the country and stripped it of all the materials they were in need of.

If you can think of anything that can be done to beautify or build up our town, go to it. Keep your capital at home, patronize home industries; help your merchants so they can sell cheaper; always get your work done in your town if possible; subscribe and pay for home papers, don't steal or borrow the reading of them. If you follow these suggestions and your town does not improve and build up it will not be your fault Try it.

Not Easy Lives

Oh, do not pray for easy lives. Pray to be stronger men. Do not pray for tasks equal to your powers. Pray for powers equal to your tasks. Then the doing of your work shall be no miracle. But you shall be a miracle. Every day you shall wonder at yourself, at the richness of life which has come to you by the grace of God.—Phillips Brooks.

Bank Roll in Rags

Thinking he was doing his mother a kindness, Willie Schmidt, a 10-year-old lad, of Kitchener, Ont., sold a sack of rags to a Jew for five cents which later were again sold to a wholesale junk dealer for six cents. Hidden in the sack of rags was the family bank roll containing $40, and all efforts to find it have proved fruitless. The rags became mixed at the warehouse.

An Awful Conundrum

The gimlet-eyed man, given to propounding conundrums, sprang a new one on a friend the other day.

"What," he asked, "is three-sevenths of chicken, two-thirds of cat, and one-half of goat?"

It was, of course, given up.

"Well" said the gimlet-eyed man, triumphantly, "the answer's Chicago. "Chi, is three-sevenths of chicken; 'ca, is two thirds of cat, and 'go' is one-half 'goat.'"

Whereupon they threw him out of the place.

Orafton Accidentally Shot

Pte. Roy Potter, a resident of Sarawak, is now lying in Owen Sound hospital suffering from injuries in his right hand as a result of an accident on Monday of last week. He was home on leave, due to report within a day or so, and was working with his father in the field. Having borrowed from a neighbor a gun he decided to return it, going to the barn to get it. It was while taking the fire arm to its owner that the gun was accidently discharged, the charge going into the right hand, severing the thumb and first two fingers.

Cow Gored Woman

Orangeville Banner:—While Tom Craig, a Mono farmer, was delivering some cattle to A. Robinson, a local buyer, at the C.P.R. stockyards between 10 and 11 o'clock Tuesday forenoon a cow went crazy and spread terror in the South and East Wards. The maddened animal broke from the bunch near the C.P.R. station and started up Margaret street, trampling gardens and attacking anything and everything that chanced to get into her way. She made a dash into Sam Street's garden Miss Street who was hanging out clothes. She knocked the unfortunate woman down and gored her badly, one horn entering her left side and cutting an ugly wound about ten inches in length diagonally across the abdomen. From Margaret street the animal made her way to Mill St., where she rushed into Jas. A. Arnott's premises, tumbled over the fence into Mrs. Jas. Williams' back yard and chased Miss Williams into the house. A couple of doors south she chased J. B. Irwin over a fence and finally attacked Mrs. John Richardson, goring her in the thigh, dislocating a thumb and bruising her badly about the body. The infuriated animal was finally rounded up in Robt. Curry's yard on Church street.

Mrs. L. H McNamara, of Walkerton, recorded 281 registrations, the highest by any lady assistant deputy registrar.

Practically every school teacher in the riding took part in the duties. The methods of taking the registration were uniform, and I am glad to say the work was well done. It would be hard to make particular mention of the helpers, but in many cases the thoroughness of the completion of the cards and the beautiful penmanship could not be excelled.

The remuneration allowed to the deputy registrars and their assistants for their services, in most cases, has already been promised to Red Cross or other Patriotic causes. In every case the assistance was cheerfully volunteered, and it has been a pleasure to me to have such cordiality and co-operation in the performance of the duties required.

I wish to express my gratification to the several newspaper publishers, who have so many demands made upon them for free advertising, but who have very kindly responded to my requests for publication of registration information in their newspaper columns.

Cost Of Victory Loan

The published figures revealing the actual cost of floating the Victory Loan show that out of total expenditures amounting to $2,000,000, only $200,000 went to all the newspapers and journals in Canada for advertising, while $750, 000 went as commission to brokers. $1,110,000 to canvassers, and $984,000 to bankers."

Captured Live Fox.

Foxes are noted for their great cunning, but we have a man in this town who succeeded in outwitting one of these animals on Sunday morning. When Pete Lobsinger was driving north in his car on Sunday morning, he noticed a dog giving chase to a fox. Pete stopped his machine and headed off Mr. Fox as it crossed the road, and between the dog and Pete they gave the fox such a merry chase that the fox was captured as it attempted to crawl through a hole in the fence. The fox is nearly full grown but it fell an easy victim to Pete.—Mildmay Gazette.

TO SAVE THE HAY CROP

Efficient Machinery and Careful Cutting Required.

Spraying for Potato Blight Begins—By Using Bordeaux Mixture and Paris Green Increased Potato Crop Will Be Harvested.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

IN a season of labor scarcity haying is a problem on the average farm. It is necessary to make use of all the modern machinery available in order to expedite the saving of this important crop. First, then, we must emphasize the use of machinery in curing and storing. Men are not to be had in plentiful supply, but, in most cases some form of co-operation may be resorted to in order to obtain the use of tedders, hay loaders and horse forks to handle the bulk of the crop. By all means plan to use machinery in place of men this year or otherwise considerable of the crop will not be harvested in the best possible condition.

It is usually safe to cut after a rain when the weather appears to have cleared. Red clover should be cut when about one-third of the heads have turned brown. The tedder should then be used until the crop is dry enough to rake—a period which will vary according to the weight of the cutting, the weather and the amount of sap in the stalk. While it is possible to make slightly better hay by cocking up, this will be a practice of doubtful value this year in view of the labor shortage. Gather with a side-delivery rake if possible, or in small windrows with an ordinary dump rake. The hay loader works best with a small windrow. By all means use a loader if possible and to facilitate matters a sliding rack may be used so that when one-half the rack is loaded it may be pulled ahead and the remainder loaded.

We mention red clover because it is the commonest and most satisfactory hay crop, and is used in all general farming hay mixtures.

Timothy should be cut either after it is out of the first blossom or after the second blossom has fallen—generally the latter. It will require less tedding than clover, is more easily cured and may be drawn in cooler after cutting. Do not let it get too ripe and woody.

Alfalfa should be cut when the young shoots are noticed starting out from the axils of the lower leaves on the stalks, and should be handled much like red clover, only greater care is necessary to preserve the leaves, a very valuable portion of the plants.—Prof. Wade Toole, Ontario Agricultural College.

Spray for Potato Rot.

Late blight and rot is the most destructive disease of potatoes in Ontario. In wet seasons it frequently destroys a very large proportion of the crop and causes a loss of many thousands of dollars to the farmers of the province. This is to a large extent a needless loss, for "late blight" and "rot" can be prevented by timely, thorough and intelligent spraying with Bordeaux mixture.

Directions for Spraying.

Spray with Bordeaux mixture, strength 4 to 6 pounds of copper sulphate (bluestone) and 4 pounds of lime to 40 gallons (imperial) of water. Commence spraying when the plants are from five to eight inches high, and keep the foliage covered with Bordeaux throughout the season. Forty to 100 gallons of the Bordeaux mixture will be required for each application, the amount to be used depending upon the size of the plants. Take special care to see that the spraying is very thoroughly done if the weather is at all damp about the 15th of July, as blight often begins at this time. Add a poison when necessary for potato beetles—arsenate of lead paste, 3½ lbs. to each 40 gallons of the liquid spray, or Paris green 2 lbs. to 40 gallons or a mixture of 2 lbs. of arsenate of lead paste and 1 lb. of Paris green to 40 gallons. From three to seven applications should be made, depending upon the season, the wetter the weather the larger the number. Do not put off spraying because it looks like rain. If the spray is on the plants half an hour before the rain comes it will be dry and sufficient of it will stick to prevent infection, which takes place during or soon after rain. Spraying as described above should prevent not only late blight and rot but also early blight and potato beetles. For late blight and rot only, it is not necessary to commence spraying until about the 10th of July, but in Ontario it is usually advisable to spray for all three.

A hand pump barrel sprayer can be used for small lots of potatoes. Most men who grow any considerable acreage of potatoes consider that a power potato sprayer is a good investment. The best results from spraying are obtained with machines fitted with T-joint attachments so as to insure covering both surfaces of the leaves at each spraying.

Precautions Necessary to Insure Success.

1. Start spraying before the blight appears. Spraying is done to prevent, not to cure.

2. Spray thoroughly, which can be done only when the mixture is applied with a good pressure so as to insure covering every portion of the plants.

3. Do not hesitate to spray because it look like rain. If the spray is on the plants half an hour before rain comes sufficient of it will stick to prevent infection, which takes place during or soon after rain. If the spraying is left until after a prolonged rain it is very likely to be too late to do much good.

4. Careless spraying never pays Spray thoroughly or not at all.—Prof. J. E. Howitt, Ontario Agricultural College.

TOWN STREET LIGHTING

Will Continue Without New Contract Until Fall Before Which Time It Is Hoped Hydro Will Act - Otherwise A Vote on New Contract In January

The Special Committee appointed to take up the matter of the expiring street lighting contract reported at Monday nights Council meeting. Their report is given in the Council minutes which follow. The Committee is still doing business and is hoping to get the Hydro Power Commission on the job before Fall. In the meantime the Company has agreed to continue the Street lighting service at the old figure. As the Hydro people claim to have a scheme completed to take over the local power company's plant and to finance the proposition for the town there seems no reason why there shouldn't be something doing within the next few months.

The Fire Brigade

The Fire & Light Committee, Reeve Douglas chairman, brought in its report following the consultation with the newly-appointed chief, A. McCartney. The Committee made a number of recommendations, which were carried, of which the following is a summary:—

Personnel of Fire Brigade:—Hon. Treas.—R. E. Truax M. P., Chief Art McCartney, John Erdman, Roy Wesley, R. B. Ferguson, Anthony Wingefolder, David Freiberger, Jno. McIntee, Guy Henderson, Louis Anderson, Louis Runstedler, Frank Bolden, Thos. Singer, Paul Jones.

The men to be paid $20 per annum.

The company to have 4 practices in season and to be paid $1.00 per man per practice. Chief to get no extra pay for practices or other duties.

The company to be composed of 12 paid men and the Chief and the Hon. Treas. making in all a company of 14.

Dissatisfied With Watering

Judge Klein complained that the street-watering was not properly done in front of his property on St George St, and he would object to paying for it. Mrs. W. S. McGregor wrote the Council that only one tank a day passed her property and that the dust was very bad. Cars were also run at an immoderate speed, making the dust worse than ever. These two complaints were referred to committee, the matter to be taken up with the street-watering contractor.

Fuel Controller Resigns

Mayor A. P. Johnston tendered his resignation as Fuel-Controller. Complaints re closets, street matters etc. took up so much of his time he said that he asked to be relieved. His resignation was accepted and a successor will be named at next meeting of the Council.

Fire Chief McCartney stated that only 1 pairs of boots out of 12 pairs bought lately were on-hand and there were no gloves. Some equipment too needed repairing. The Chairman will go into this matter with the Chief.

Town Treasurer Collins asked that a by-law be passed authorizing him and the Mayor to borrow $5,000 from the Merchants Bank for current expenditures, which was done.

Want More Money

Messrs Alex. George and David George wrote the Council that hereafter they would not run horses nor draw hose reels to fires at less than $5 a team. This matter was referred to the Fire & Light Com., who referred it back to the Council for discussion. The present fee allowed by the Council is $2.

Coun. Lippert favored filing the letters. The Council he said, should not be dictated to by anybody. There was no obligation to reply to the communications. If the Committee thought they were not paying the price, it was their business to recommend an increase.

Coun. George said the citizens were entitled to fire protection, and the Council should deal with the two communications one way or the other.

Couns. Lippert and Pletsch moved that the two letters be filed.—Carried.

A Good Suggestion

Coun. George suggested that as under the new arrangements the fire brigade was small and most of the men would be needed at a fire that certain rules be drafted. For instance, that only one-third of the members be permitted to be absent from town at the same time, that the Capt. and Chief could not both be away the same day etc.

The Council agreed to have the Chairman talk these matters over with the Fire Chief and come to some arrangement.

Wants A New Sewer

Contractor Alex. Haas wrote the Council that last year's Council had promised to build a sewer on Campbell St. where he had erected a new residence but had not done so. He now had another proposition to build a second new house and asked that the Council do something. He understood a number of the neighbors were willing to pay for sewer connection.

Want Race Track Fixed

A deputation composed of D. Robertson, Robt. Irwin, H. Irwin and others waited on the Council asking that the old race be fixed up and suggesting a grant to put a roof on the grandstand at the Fair grounds. If the Council would comply with their request they proposed to organize a Track Association and have races here occasionally. A committee composed of Couns. Lippert, Pletch and George was appointed to meet a committee of citizens composed of: Messrs. R. Irwin, Geo. D McKay and I. Glintz, look into the matter and report at next Council meeting.

The Street-Lighting Contract

Mr. D. Robertson K. C., president of the Walkerton Light & Power Co. said he had gone into the matter of the Street-lighting contract with Mr. Rowland and the Council's Committee. It was found that the Council could not make a contract without a vote of the people. As the Council did not wish a vote until January, the company was willing to let the street-lighting run along at the present price, without a renewal of contract, until October, and see if Hydro does anything in the meantime. He pointed out that the contract only called for 80 candle power lights on the Front St. and the company had been supplying 100 candle power lights, also 60 candle power lights on the other streets instead of 40. When the old contract was made the company was able to buy the larger lamps for renewals at 89 cts. There are now $1.20. The smaller lamps now costs the company $1, in place of 60 cts.

The Special Committee appointed by the Council to deal with this matter brought in the following report:—The Light Committee appointed to take up the matter of Street-Lighting met on June 10th and came to the conclusion that Mayor and F. W. Lippert go to Toronto and interview the Ontario Hydro Commission re same. The above named went to Toronto and they met Mr. James, Hydro Engineer, who stated that they had a proposition in shape to present the Walkerton Electric Light and Power Company with a view toward buying out their plant. We afterward met the President Mr. Robertson and Mr. Rowland of the Walkerton Electric Light and Power Co. and it was shown that this Council could not enter into a contract without presenting by-law to be voted on by the ratepayers. The Company agreed to let the matter stand as it is and collect the usual charges per month for Town Hall, Power and Street Light until Fall when the Hydro Commission will have had time to place their proposition before the Electric Light Company and possibly arrive at some arrangement. If that cannot be done by this time the Council to prepare same. By-law to place before the electors at the January Elections.

It will pay you to study the merchants' ads. in this week's Telescope.

SENT UP FOR TRIAL

Reeve Fisinger Of Carrick, Charged With Using Seditious Language, Is Out On $500 Bail

Reeve Moses Fisinger of Carrick received a summons last Wednesday afternoon to appear at Walkerton Police Court at 2 p. m. Thursday last to answer a charge of having made treasonable and seditious utterances before a number of individuals in the village of Mildmay. The information was laid by Dominion Police J. E. Grieves and T. A. Muxworthy of London.

Court was opened at the Town Hall at 2 p. m. Thursday but was adjourned for two hours to allow the defendant's lawyer, Mr. O. E. Klein, to get here from Port Elgin. As Mr. Klein did not arrive on the afternoon train, the preliminary hearing was proceeded with before Magistrate Telton, County Crown Attorney Dixon appearing for the Crown. Four witnesses were examined.

Mrs. Jacob Schmidt of Mildmay gave evidence that Reeve Fisinger had talked to her at the home of her mother Mrs. Susan Kloepfer at Mildmay, last December and was settling up with her brother Mike. He said, "We won't fight for those Catholics in France" and also, "They are shipping the women over there by the carload for the use of the men."

Fisinger was permitted by the magistrate to question the witness. In doing so he denied having made the statements, saying that as he had known Mrs. Schmidt all her life to be a Catholic, he was hardly likely to make any such statement to her.

Mr. Ed Kulbleisch, hardware merchant and garage owner of Mildmay, said that at the beginning of June he, Jack Harper and two others had a conversation with Reeve Fisinger at his garage. Fisinger was in town to take the train for Toronto with the Farmers' Delegation. He quoted the defendant as saying, "The Boys now being sent across are sold like little pigs at $8 a head. Perhaps the Govt. was using the money for clothing or transportation."

The defendant on being allowed to question the witness asked:—Did I not say that I heard what you say about the boys being sold? Did I not also say "You hear so many things that you can't believe anything." The witness answered "yes" to both questions.

John Harper, farmer, of Carrick, corroborated Mr. Kulbleisch's testimony. Asked by Magistrate Telton whether he made any comment at the time in reply to Fisinger's remarks, Harper said:—"I told Fisinger I would not like to make the statement."

Fisinger, on taking the box for examination said he had been down to Ottawa with the Farmers, Delegation and was going to Toronto on the day referred to by the witnesses. A meeting of the ratepayers of the township had been called without consulting him. He was made chairman and was asked if farmer boys ought to go and fight. He replied that he thought one man had as much right to go as another and that the military authorities certainly knew more about it than we did. He asked them to choose somebody else as a delegate but the meeting forced him into it. He heard so many matters discussed by the farmers at Ottawa. One of them was:—"Is it true that the boys are sent over that way, at $8 a head." When I got back to Mildmay, said Fisinger, we were talking about this matter. I told them I heard it but you hear so much you can't believe anything. I think, said the defendant, I have done as much as any white man. He stated he had given the casting vote at the Council to give $1,000 to the Y. M. C. A. He produced statements signed by Mr. J. C. Thompson, president of the Carrick Preparedness League, stating that Fisinger had been largely instrumental in securing patriotic grants from the Carrick Council and had been active in patriotic work on many occasions. A statement from the Township clerk, J. A. Johnston, said that Fisinger had devoted a great deal of time and energy to patriotic movements. In concluding his statement, Fisinger said that the trouble had been made for him through spite by people who never contributed anything nor did anything.

Asked by the two Dominion Police present if he didn't try to settle the case with W. J. McNally, the defendant said he had asked him to drop it as there was nothing in it and he didn't want a great splurge in the papers.

Philip Gress, farmer, of Carrick, was permitted to make a statement on behalf of Fisinger. He said:—"As regards the statement with reference to soldiers being sold at $8 to $10 a head, we heard them at Ottawa and on the train both going and coming. They were heard at Toronto. The reason for those statements may be due possibly to the temper that the farmers were in. I can corroborate Mr. Fisinger's statements about this talk going on about the soldiers. Where it was originated nobody knows but it was there and circulated quite freely so it is altogether likely that Mr. Fisinger just gave that talk as he had heard it."

At the conclusion of the hearing, the magistrate, at the suggestion of the Crown Attorney, decided to send the defendant up for trial.

He was allowed to go on his own bail for $500.

A Tale of Youth and Summer Time and the Baxter Family, Especially William brushed his hair. He went so far this time as to brush his eyebrows, which seemed not much altered by the operation. Suddenly he was deeply affected by something seen in the glass.

"By George!" he exclaimed aloud.

Seizing a small hand mirror, he placed it in juxtaposition to his right eye and closely studied his left profile as exhibited in the larger mirror. Then he examined his right profile, subjecting it to a like scrutiny, emotional, yet attentive and prolonged.

"By George!" he exclaimed again. "By George!"

He had made a discovery. There was a downy shadow upon his upper lip. What he had just found out was that this down could be seen projecting beyond the line of his lip, like a tiny nimbus. It could be seen in profile.

"By George!" William exclaimed.

He was still occupied with the two mirrors when his mother again tapped softly upon his door, rousing him as from a dream, brief but engaging, to the heavy realities of that day.

"What do you want now?"

"I won't come in," said Mrs. Baxter. "I just came to see."

"See what?"

"I wondered—I thought perhaps you needed something. I knew your watch was out of order"—

"For'tean's sake, what if it is?"

She offered a murmur of placative laughter as her apology and said:

There Was a Downy Shadow Upon His Upper Lip.

"Well, I just thought I'd tell you because, if you did intend going to the station, I thought you probably wouldn't want to miss it and get there too late. I've got your hat here, all nicely brushed for you. It's nearly twenty minutes of 1, Willie."

"What?"

"Yes, it is. It's"—

She had no further speech with him.

Breathless, William flung open his door, seized the hat, rocketed down the stairs and out through the front door, which he left open behind him. Eight seconds later he returned at a gallop, hurtled up the stairs and into his room, emerging instantly with something concealed under his coat.

Mrs. Baxter sighed and went to a window in her own room and looked out.

William was already more than halfway to the next corner, where there was a car line that ran to the station, but the distance was not too great for Mrs. Baxter to comprehend the nature of the symmetrical white parcel now carried in his right hand. Her face became pensive as she gazed after the flying slender figure. There came to her mind the recollection of a seventeen-year-old boy who had brought a box of candy—a small one, like William's—to the station once, long ago, when she had been visiting in another town. For just a moment she thought of that boy she had known so many years ago, and a smile came vaguely upon her face. She wondered what kind of a woman he had married and how many children he had and whether he was a widower—

The fleeting recollection passed. She turned from the window and shook her head, puzzled.

"Now, where on earth could Jane and that little Kirsted girl have gone?" she murmured.

At the station William, descending from the street car, found that he had six minutes to spare. Reassured of so much by the great clock in the station tower, he entered the building and, with calm and dignified steps, crossed the large waiting room. Those calm and dignified steps were taken by feet which little betrayed the tremulousness of the knees above them.

He made sure that the person he sought was not in the waiting room. Therefore he turned in the doors which gave admission to the tracks, but before he went out he paused for an instant of displeasure. Hard by the door stood a telephone booth, and from inside this booth a little girl of nine or ten was peering expertly out at William, her face just above the lower level of the glass window in the door.

Even a prospect thus curtailed revealed her as a smudged and dusty little girl. To William she suggested nothing familiar. As his glance happened to encounter hers the peering eyes grew instantly brighter with excitement. She exposed her whole countenance at the window and impulsively made a face at him.

Three seconds later the dusty faced little girl and her mouse were spent utterly from William's mind. For as the doors swung together behind him he saw Miss Pratt. There were no gates nor iron barriers to obscure the view. There was no train shed to darken the air. She was at some distance, perhaps 200 feet, along the tracks, where the sleeping cars of the long train would stop. But there she stood, mistakable far as other on this wide earth.

There she stood—a glowing little figure in the hazy September sunlight, her hair an amber mist under the adorable little hat, a small bunch of violets at her waist, a larger bunch of fragrant but less expensive sweet peas in her right hand, half a dozen pink roses in her left, her little dog Flopit in the crook of one arm and a one pound box of candy in the crook of the other—ineffable, radiant, starry, she stood.

Near her also stood her young hostess and Wallace Banks, Johnnie Watson and Joe Bullitt, three young gentlemen in a condition of solemn tensity. Miss Parcher saw William as he emerged from the station building, and she waved her parasol in greeting, attracting the attention of the others to him, so that they all turned and stared.

Seventeen sometimes finds it embarrassing, even in a state of deep emotion, to walk 200 feet or thereabout toward a group of people who steadfastly watch the long approach. And when the watching group contains the lady of all the world before whom one wishes to appear most debonair, and contains not only her, but several rivals who, though fairly good hearted, might hardly be trusted to neglect such an opportunity to murmur something jocular about one— No, it cannot be said that William appeared to be wholly without self consciousness.

In fancy he had prophesied for this moment something utterly different. He had seen himself parting from her, the two alone as within a cloud. He had seen himself gently placing his box of candy in her hands, some of his fingers just touching some of hers and remaining thus lightly in contact to the very last. He had seen himself bending toward the sweet blond head to murmur the few last words of simple eloquence, while her eyes lifted in mysterious appeal to his. And he had put no other figures, not even Miss Parcher's, into this picture.

Parting is the most dramatic moment in young love, and if there is one time when the lover wishes to present a lofty but graceful appearance it is at the last. To leave with the loved one for recollection a final picture of manly dignity in sorrow—that, above all things, is the lover's desire. And yet, even at the beginning of William's 200 foot advance, later so much discussed, he felt the heat surging over his ears, as he took off his hat, thinking to wave it jauntily in reply to Miss Parcher, he made but an uncertain gesture of it, so that he wished he had not tried it. Moreover, he had covered less than a third of the distance when he became aware that all of the group were staring at him with unaccountable eagerness and had begun to laugh.

William felt certain that his attire was in no way disordered nor in itself a cause for laughter. All of these people had often seen him dressed as he was today and had preserved their gravity. But in spite of himself he took off his hat again and looked to see if anything about it might explain this mirth, which at his action increased. Nay, the laughter began to be shared by strangers.

CHAPTER XXII.
The Bride to Be.

WILLIAM'S inward state became chaotic.

He tried to smile carelessly to prove his composure, but he found that he had lost almost all control over his features. He had no knowledge of his actual expression except that it hurt him. In desperation he fell back upon hauteur. He managed to frown and walked proudly. At that they laughed the more, Wallace Banks rudely pointing again and again at William, and not till the oncoming sufferer reached a spot within twenty feet of these delighted people did he grasp the significance of Wallace's repeated gesture of pointing. Even then he understood only when the gesture was supplemented by half articulate shouts:

They Were Walking With Their "Stummicks Out of Joint."

"Behind you! Look behind you!"

The stung youth turned.

There, directly behind him, he beheld an exclusive little procession consisting of two damsels in single file, the first soiled with house moving, the second with apple sauce.

For greater caution they had removed their shoes, and each damsel as she paraded dangled from each far extended hand a shoe. And both damsels, whether beneath apple sauce or dust smudge, were suffused with the raptures of a great mockery.

They were walking with their "stummicks out o' joint."

At sight of William's face they squealed. They turned and ran. They got themselves out of sight.

Simultaneously the air filled with solid thunder and the pompous train shook the ground. Ah, what a the word! This was the thing that meant to bear away the golden girl and honeysuckle of the world—meant to and would, unshaking one iron second!

Now a porter had her handbag.

Dear heaven, to be a porter—yes, a colored one! What of that now? Just to be a simple porter and journey with her to the far, strange pearl among cities whence she had come!

The gentle porter bowed her toward the steps of his car, but first she gave Flopit into the hands of May Parcher for a moment and whispered a word to Wallace Banks, then to Joe Bullitt, then to Johnnie Watson; then she ran to William.

She took his hand.

"Don't forget," she whispered—"don't forget Lola."

He stood stock still. His face was blank.

She infolded May Parcher, kissed her devotedly; then, with Flopit once more under her arm, she ran and jumped upon the steps just as the train began to move. She stood there, on the lowest step, slowly gliding away from them, and in her eyes there was a sparkle of tears, left, it may be, from her laughter at poor William's pageant with Jane and Ruenle Kirsted, or, it may be, not.

"Why, Willie Baxter!" she cried, blinking at him.

She could not wave to her friends in answer to their gestures of farewell, for her arms were too full of Flopit and roses and candy and sweet peas, but she kept nodding to them in a way that showed them how much she thanked them for being sorry she was going and made it clear that she was sorry too and loved them all.

"Goodby!" she meant.

Faster she glided. The engine passed from sight round a curve beyond a culvert, but for a moment longer they could see the little figure upon the steps, and to the very last glimpse they had of her the small, golden head was still nodding "Goodby!" Then those steps whereon she stood passed in their turn beneath the culvert, and they saw her no more.

Lola Pratt was gone!

Wet eyed, her young hostess of the long summer turned away and stumbled against William. "Why, Willie Baxter!" she cried, blinking at him.

The last car of the train had rounded the curve and disappeared, but William was still waving farewell, not with his handkerchief, but with a symmetrical one pound parcel, wrapped in white tissue paper, girdled with blue ribbon.

"Never mind," said May Parcher. "Let's all walk uptown together and talk about her on the way, and we'll go by the express office, and you can send your candy to her by express, Willie."

In the smallish house which all summer long, from morning until late at night, had resounded with the voices of young people, echoing their songs, murmurous with their theories of love or vibrating with their glee, sometimes shaking all over during their more boisterous moods—in that house, now comparatively so vacant, the proprietor stood and breathed deep breaths.

"Hah!" he breathed sonorously. He gave himself several resounding slaps upon the chest, then went out to the porch and sat in a rocking chair near his wife. He spread himself out expansively. "My glory," he said, "I believe I'll take off my coat! I haven't had my coat off outside of my own room all summer. I believe I'll take a vacation! By George, I believe I'll stay home this afternoon!"

"That's nice," said Mrs. Parcher.

"Hah!" he said. "My glory, I believe I'll take off my shoes!"

And, meeting no objection, he proceeded to carry out this plan.

"Hah-ah!" he said and placed his stockinged feet upon the railing, where a number of vines, running upon strings, made a screen between the porch and the street. He lit a large cigar. "Well, well," he said, "that tastes good! If this keeps on I'll be in as good shape as I was last spring before you know it!" Leaning far back in the rocking chair, his hands behind his head, he smoked with fervor, but suddenly he jumped in a way which showed that his nerves were far from normal. His feet came to the floor with a thump, he jerked the cigar out of his mouth and turned a face of consternation upon his wife.

"What's the matter?"

"Suppose," said Mr. Parcher hoarsily —"suppose she missed her train!"

Mrs. Parcher shook her head.

"Think not?" he said brightening. "I ordered the livery stable to have a carriage here in lots of time."

"They did," said Mrs. Parcher severely; "about $5 worth."

"Well, I don't mind that," he returned, putting his feet up again. "After all, she was a mighty fine little girl in her way. The only trouble with me was that crowd of boys. Having to listen to them liked to kill me, and I believe if she'd stayed just one more day I'd been a goner!"

"Mr. Parcher!" a youthful voice protested.

He rose and, separating two of the vines which screened the end of the porch from the street, looked out. Two small maidens had paused upon the sidewalk and were peering over the picket fence.

"Mr. Parcher," said Jane as soon as his head appeared between the vines—"Mr. Parcher, Miss Pratt's gone. She's gone away on the cars."

"You think so?" he asked gravely.

"We saw her," said Jane. "Ruenle an' I were there. Willie was goin' to chase us, I guess, but we went in the baggage room behind trunks, an' we saw her go. She got on the cars, an' it went with her in it. Honest, she's gone away, Mr. Parcher."

Before speaking Mr. Parcher took a long look at this telepathic child. In his fond eyes she was a marvel and a darling.

"Well, thank you, Jane," he said.

Jane, however, had turned her head and was staring at the corner, which was out of his sight.

"Oo-oo-ooh!" she murmured.

"What's the trouble, Jane?"

"Willie!" she said. "It's Willie an' that Joe Bullitt an' Johnnie Watson an' Mr. Wallace Banks. They're with Miss May Parcher. They're comin' right here!"

Mr. Parcher gave forth a low moan and turned pathetically to his wife, but she cheered him with a laugh.

"They've only walked up from the station with May," she said. "They won't come in. You'll see!"

Believed, Mr. Parcher turned again to speak to Jane, but she was not there. He caught but a glimpse of her, running up the street as fast as she could, hand in hand with her companion.

GREAT POTATO WASTE

Can Be Prevented by Thorough Spraying.

Women's Meetings In Full Swing—The Summer Institute Meetings Are of Benefit to Every Woman Who Attends—Topics to Be Discussed and Work Planned.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

POTATOES are sprayed to prevent such fungus disease as Early Blight and Late Blight and Rot. These diseases are caused by plants known as fungi Those fungi which derive their nourishment from living plants injure them in so doing in various ways and thus give rise to what are known as fungus diseases.

In combating the great majority of fungus diseases methods of prevention only are practicable. Spraying potatoes is not done to cure but to prevent disease. In other words the object of spraying is to cover the surface of the leaves and stems with a substance, poisonous to the spores of fungi, in which they cannot grow, and penetrate the plant. Spraying, therefore, in order to be effective, must be timely and thorough. The spray mixture must be on the plants before the spores reach them and the surface of the leaves and stems must be covered so completely that there is not the smallest space on which a spore can germinate.

Efficient spraying of potatoes depends:

1. Upon the use of the proper fungicide. Bordeaux mixture has so far proved to be the only satisfactory spray mixture for potato diseases.

2. Upon timely and repeated spraying. Spraying should be commenced when the plants are from six to eight inches high and repeated at intervals of from a week to ten days throughout the growing season. From three to seven applications will be required, the number depending upon the weather, the wetter the weather the more frequent the spraying.

3. Upon the liberal use of Bordeaux mixture. From 50 to 100 gallons of Bordeaux mixture should be used per acre at each application.

4. Upon thorough spraying, which means the covering of every portion of the plant with the Bordeaux mixture in the form of a fine mist. This is best done only when the solution is applied with good pressure so as to ensure covering every portion of the plant. The best results from spraying are obtained when potato nozzles are used which are fitted with T-joint attachments, so as to cover both surfaces of the leaves at each spraying.

Upon spraying before rather than after prolonged rainy periods. Protection of the plants takes place during or soon after rain. Therefore it is of the utmost importance to have the spray mixture on the plants when the rain comes. — Prof. J. E. Howitt, Ontario Agricultural College.

The Importance of Women's Institute Meetings.

A series of meetings which, to the women of rural Ontario, have always proved worth while, and increasingly so the last year or two, is the Women's Institute meetings. These are important because they are so far-reaching in their nature. They afford the town and country woman, no matter what her denomination may be, a channel through which she can be of all-round service to humanity.

Since the war began Red Cross and other patriotic work has, of course, received first consideration. The alleviation of suffering seems peculiarly woman's work. The need is greater to-day than ever.

The great demand by the Allies for certain foods such a beef, pork, wheat and sugar has caused the housewife to change her methods of we-war days. She must now learn substitute and to eliminate various forms of waste. Perishable foods must be more widely used, not only in summer, but also in winter. These must be conserved through proper storage, canning or drying. Such subjects as these may be discussed at the meetings. An expert demonstrator may be secured from the Department to give information or a practical demonstration to assist the housewife. The members may club together and do their canning in one centre with one fire if they choose, and in addition to the work accomplished may have a social time together.

The children in the rural districts must not be forgotten. They must be prepared for the great responsibilities which are too soon to fall upon them. Their education must not be neglected. They must not be handicapped by physical imperfections. Subjects of importance to the child must be discussed and means adopted to improve conditions. The Medical Inspection of rural schools and the clinics held through the Women's Institute are doing much to improve conditions.

The girls also need attention. We are apt to forget the girls in our anxiety for the boys. Their lives and their prospects for the future are being affected by this war. Hence opportunities for study, for amusement, for developing their talents to the full, must be afforded them. Many of these opportunities may be secured through the Institute.

Surely with subjects of such vital importance as the above-mentioned, all meetings should be worth while. We would call the attention of all to the importance of the summer meeting, held throughout June, when the delegate from the Department is in attendance. She has the latest information on all subjects of importance to the Institutes, and is a specialist on her own particular subjects. — G. A. Putnam, Superintendent Women's Institutes.

Decorations won by Canadian heroes on the field of battle cannot be worn by anyone but the recipient The Militia Department at Ottawa last week notified the District Headquarters to this effect. The ruling comes as a result of a flood of inquiries from relatives of deceased soldiers who have been honored for bravery.

When the grasshopper ceases to hop and the old cow quits her bawling; when the fishes no longer flop and the baby stops its squalling; when the dunners no longer dun—and the hoot-owl quits its hooting; when the riders ever cease to run and the burglar stops his looting; when the vine no longer runs and the skylark stops its larking; when the sun no longer shines and the young man quits his sparking; when the heavens begin to drop and the old maids stop advising, then it's time to shut up shop and quit your advertising.

Relieved From Service

Mr Clarence Oberle, of the Merchants Bank Staff, reported recently for military service at London but on re-examination was reduced to Class E. Clarence is the son of Mr and Mrs. Andrew Oberle, Walkerton. His brother, Roy, has been on the firing line for two years.

A Concrete Temple

A Buddhist temple now in course of construction at Hakodate, Japan, is being built of concrete. This is the first instance of the use of concrete in the construction of such an edifice. The building was designed by Japanese architects and constructed under the supervision of Japanese engineers; but the re-enforcing material came from the United States.

School In Cellars

The children of France are going to school in champagne cellars these days, where the sunshine never pierces through, ventilation is largely imaginary, and the noise of the guns booms down to punctuate the spelling of cat-a-pult. But that is the war zone, and war is the best reason in the world for leaving big modern school buildings to descend to cellars and dugouts in the ground; for even little children must endure bad air and artificial light when bombs and shells are the alternative.

Legal Weight Of Potatoes

Under the Dominion Inspection and Sales Act a bushel of potatoes must weigh 60 pounds, a peck must weigh 15 pounds, and a gallon 7½ pounds. A bag of potatoes must weigh 90 pounds and a barrel must contain 165 pounds of potatoes. A purchaser of a bag of potatoes who receives less than 90 pounds may invoke the penalties provided by the Act—for the first offence a fine not exceeding $25, for each subsequent offence a fine of no less than $50, with imprisonment in default of payment.

Put On a Choker

Two ladies were talking the other day and in some way the telephone subject came under discussion. They both had "party-line" telephones. One of the ladies was telling about how mean somebody in her neighborhood is. To use her own language, the somebody will "talk to some other fool for half an hour, and never say anything either, and here I will be nearly wild wanting to order things for dinner or tell Tom what I want him to fetch home. Are you bothered that way?" The other replied: "I used to be, but am not any more. A friend of mine who is connected with the service told me how to put on a choker, and I will tell you. You may have noticed those two metal knobs at the top of the instrument. Well, they are there whether you have noticed them or not. Now, when somebody has used the line about twice as long as she ought to, I just lay a key or a short piece of wire across those two knobs. Then, in a minute or two, I take off my short circuit and can get central all right. I used to feel as if I wanted to say bad words, but now I let gossips feel that way." The hint was thankfully received by the one to whom it was given, and perhaps others will be thankful too.

CHILDREN'S AID

Editor Telescope

Dear Sir,

For some time I have felt that a report of services rendered during my time as Agent and Secretary of the Children's Aid Society of the County of Bruce from July 1st 1910 to April 1st 1918—might be looked for. In that time 70 complaintive neglected children came to the Board 57 children were placed in foster homes, 4 boys were placed in the Industrial School at Mimico, and 2 girls in the Alexandra School Toronto. 123 Board Meetings were held of which I missed one, being called to a funeral service. Over two thousand letters were sent out and over seven thousand miles covered as follows Toronto five times, Guelph once, White Church twice, Lucknow three times, Kincardine three times, Hanover once, Cargill four times, Paisley four times, Port Elgin six times, Southampton, five times, Epworth three times, Chesley five times, Owen Sound twice, Wiarton ten times; Lions Head twice, Dyers Bay once, Neustadt twice, Ripley twice together with many visits and consultations at home and replies to a number of telegrams and telephone messages from different places. I am pleased to say that I had the full sympathy and confidence of the Board and County Council as well as of J. J. Kelso Esq. of Toronto Supt. of Children's Aid Societies for the Province of Ontario. These approvals I have learned to appreciate very highly in my endeavours to do my best for neglected children which to me was a great pleasure.

Respectfully
D. McLennan.

Police Court Case

On information laid by the military authorities, Mr. Henry Weishar appeared in the police court before Magistrates Tolton and Richardson on Wednesday charged with keeping and employing an absentee and deserter from military duty, knowing him to be such. Considerable evidence was taken but the case was adjourned for eight days for further hearing. If found guilty, Weishar is liable to a fine of not less than $100 and costs or more than $500. The young man, who created the trouble, was a native of Formosa, Kraemer by name, who had been in the West and after registering under the M.S.A., came to this part and secured employment with Weishar. Some weeks ago, he received notice to report for duty but paid no attention to the summons. It is alleged that his employer was aware of the fact that he had been ordered to report and in neglecting to dismiss Kraemer from his employment, he left himself liable under the act.

Three Years In Khaki

One of Walkerton's youngest and oldest War veteran's and a chap of whom his parents and the people of this town have great reason to be proud, is Arthur Farrar, son of Mr. and Mrs. Sam Farrar, who arrived home from Overseas on Saturday. Arthur is one of the most youthful boys that have come back after taking a heroic part in the awful struggle but he is one of the very oldest in service. When Arthur signed up with the 35th in 1915, he was slightly below the age limit. Since that time he has spent fifteen months on the battle-front and ten months in Military Hospitals in England, convalescing from a serious wound. It was the 7th of September of last year that Arthur was badly wounded in the right leg near Lens. The muscles were badly torn by the shrapnel and it will take two or three years for the injured member to recover, when Arthur hopes he will have the full use of it again. At the present time he walks with a limp, due to the necessity of holding the limb rigid as it has not the necessary strength. Needless to say he was glad to get home after three long years Overseas. Walkerton looked good to him, although all of his old chums are gone, most of them Overseas. Arthur looks well, considering all he has been through, and hopes in time to recover his former fitness in every respect. On Thursday night a public reception will be given for him and two other returned heroes and next week he leaves again to report at the Convalescent Hospital at Guelph.

DID YOU SEE 'EM?

By An Odd Chance Walkerton Citizens Had An Interesting Program Of Aeronautics Dished Up For Their Benefit On Monday.

Monday was Aeroplane Day at Walkerton. It was a day that will be remembered by every small boy in town as a red letter day as long as he lives. Youngsters and grownups too, who four days ago had never seen an air scout in their lives, now speak familiarly of "monoplanes" and "biplanes" and "joy sticks", "volplaning" and "spinning nose dives" and are ready to expatiate on aviation with quite an air of authority. It all started by a green pilot from Camp Borden getting lost early Monday morning and after doing a few turns over the town, spending the day in an adjoining field where the crowds flocked as to Ringling's Circus from morning to night. Later in the afternoon a skilled pilot arrived from Borden and after giving some nice exhibitions of alighting and getting away, completed the day's program by flying all over town just above the tree tops and doing some fancy turns and flips. Everybody had a chance to see the planes at work and probably not ten persons in town missed seeing the exhibition. It was a treat that the townspeople certainly enjoyed. In fact if the aviators had been specially brought here for an exhibition they couldn't have given the people a better chance to see their work.

A Yankee Cadet

The young aviator, whose straying off his course was responsible for the aeroplanes' visit to Walkerton, was an American Cadet from New York City. He left Borden early Monday morning to do a few turns around Collingwood, Barrie and other points and return to Camp. By some means he get completely lost. He started to land at Hanover but instinct probably told him that there was a better town a few miles distant. He came quite close to the ground and stampeded some horses at one farm. Some fair young damsels along the wayside also became terrified of the plane and ducked. After circling around Walkerton, looking for a landing place he started to land at the Fair Grounds but spying some horses pasturing there, he glided by and finally dropped in Robt. Simpson's field a half mile north-east of the town. He made a good landing just before his gasoline ran out. On wiring to Camp Borden for instructions he was told to wait here and a supply of "gas" would be sent him, the ordinary commercial gasoline not being used for the planes. The meant staying around all day. Crowds of people flocked out to see the novel visiter, to admire his machine and to ask a thousand and one questions. The aviator was a quiet well-bred young chap. He patiently answered the queries, foolish and otherwise, that were thrown at him, and certainly made a good impression on the people here. As the public understood that he could not leave his plane, several heaping baskets were dispatched to him at lunch time by thoughtful women of the town. "What are you lacking"" asked one of the quizzing crowd. "Gas and common sense" replied the young aviator who was in a somewhat penetential mood, anticinating a severe "calling" from his officer on returning to Camp.

The Joy-Stick

The machine which he flew, is the familiar type of Curtis biplane which is in use extensively at the training camps but is not as speedy or effective as the fighting planes used in France, although larger in size. Many people expected to see the plane steered by a wheel like an auto and were surprised to find that the steering is done with a vertical stick about the size of a cane, which can be inclined in any direction, every slight turn having a distinct effect in directing the course of the plane. The steering apparatus is known as the joy-stick and it is so sensitive to the manipulation of the pilot that the new flyer must learn to control his nerves and not do things with the "joy-stick" when the machine gets humpy up in the clouds. That is the principal thing the aviator has to guard against according to the boys of the training corps.

Have To Crank It

Like the tin-lizzy the aeroplane has to be cranked. At least the propeller which is located at the front of the machine has to be given a few twists by one of the mechanics to give it a start. It soon gathers speed and turns so rapidly that the eye can't follow its dizzy pace. Then the machine launches forward on three wheels along the ground. A few rods of a run and it rises gracefully as a bird in the air.

CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY COLLECTIONS

Editor Telescope

Dear Sir:—

During the recent collection for this Society, I understand that the canvassers met with perhaps more than the usual number of objections. Probably the chief one was that it is unnecessary to do this as the work is a county work and consequently ought to be wholly maintained by grants from the County Council. As to support, this Society does not differ very much from the Hospital. The Hospital, however, requires a much larger amount of funds.

In Counties where Children's Aid Society work is fully done, it has been found necessary to appeal to the public to assist. From recent annual statements, I find that the Society of the County of Grey obtained the sum of $1286 in this way, that of the County of Perth $1273, and that of Wellington and Guelph $2348. The above are, of course, the amounts obtained for the work of a year in each case.

Our Society has been in operation for about 20 years, and during this time no appeal of this kind was made. But the work was done on a very limited scale. The work is now being undertaken to an extent required by the needs of the county, and for this additional work, additional financial support is necessary. The War, so far from furnishing an argument against expansion just now, is rather a strong argument in favor as it is to be feared that a greater need for help from the Society will be called for on his account.

Our annual meeting will be held in October and at that time full information as to the finances and the work generally will be made public. It is believed that with the fuller light the objections will fade away, and that the advanced step taken will meet with general approval. Remember that the work of these societies is of the utmost importance, and will well repay the expenditure involved.

Thanking you, Mr. Editor, for the opportunity of making this explanation, I am,

Yours,
J. Morgan,
President C. A. Society.

EVERY GARDENER HIS OWN SEED GROWER

(Experimental Farms Note

While rigid selection from year to year is necessary for most kinds of vegetables when grown for seed; and while to keep them pure the different varieties have to be grown some distance apart, yet most of the seed grown in the home garden is likely to give almost or quite as satisfactory results or even better than that which is bought, and, as some seed may be difficult to obtain next year, it is recommended for each person who has a garden to let a few plants or specimens ripen, from which seed can be saved.

It is better to mark the best plant and save the seed from them rather than to save the seed which remain after the plants have been cropped.

The following minimum number of feet, plants or specimens to be saved is suggested as being sufficient to supply enough seed for the home garden in 1919: Beans, 5 ft.; Corn, 1 ear, Cucumbers, 1; Lettuce, 3 plants; Melons, 1; Peas, 5 ft; Radishes, 3 plants; Spinach, 3 plants. Squash, 1; Tomatoes, 3.

Either reserve a few feet of the row of beans, or, better still, mark a few productive plants free from disease.

FOOD BOARD REGULATIONS

On the 1st of July the Canada Food Board Order became effective requiring all public bakeries and private households also, to use 10% substitute flour. On the 15th of July this percentage is to be increased to 20% in all of Canada east of Port Arthur. The question then will arise in each housekeeper's mind, what are substitutes for wheat flour, where can they be had and how are they to be used. Substitutes as defined by the new law, include bran, shorts, corn flour, corn meal, edible cornstarch, hominy, corn grits, barley flour, rolled oats, meal, rice, rice flour, buckwheat flour, potato flour, tapioca flour, rye flour and rye meal. Potatoes are also classed as a substitute for wheat flour, in proportion of four pounds of potatoes to one of the other substitutes mentioned, on account of the higher percentage of water in potatoes.

It may be necessary to experiment with those substitute flours a few times before succeeding in producing a satisfactory loaf and opportunity should be taken to study the effect of these substitutes and the different methods of mixing, handling, fermenting and "proofing" of the doughs. As most of the wheat flour substitutes accelerate the fermentation, it will be better not to work the dough as long as usual. About four hours fermentation will be sufficient in a room of moderate temperature, divided as follows:—

2 hours 45 minutes for the first punch, 45 minutes for the second punch, 30 minutes is allowed before the dough is finally taken out, kneaded and cut into loaves. After being set in the pan, 45 minutes is enough for "proofing," when it is ready for the oven.

When corn meal, oat meal or other meal is used the moisture retaining qualities of the loaf may be improved by scalding these ingredients at a temperature of 150 degrees Fahrenheit and allowing two hours for cooling. Most of the wheat flour substitutes retain the moisture in the loaf longer than will the wheat flour and yield an increased amount of bread on account of their higher absorption of water, thus reducing the amount of yeast and shortening necessary. The following are a few of the recipes recommended to bakers. They will be useful also in private households when substitutes are to be mixed with wheat flour for bread.

Corn Flour Bread—2½ pounds standard flour, ½ pound corn flour, 1 tablespoon brown sugar, 2 tablespoon salt, ½ oz. yeast, 1 tablespoon fat, 3 cups of water. This should produce 4½ pounds of bread.

Barley Flour Bread—5½ cups wheat flour, 1½ cups barley flour, 2 cups milk and water, 1 cake compressed yeast, 2 tablespoons sugar, 2 tablespoons fat, 2 teaspoons salt. This should make two loaves.

Rice Yeast Bread—8 cups standard flour, 7 cups boiled rice, ½ cup milk and water, 1 cup warm water (for yeast) 1 cake compressed yeast, 4 teaspoons sugar, 4 teaspoons fat 1½ teaspoons salt. When ready for the pans will look like a stiff drop batter. The quantities mentioned make two loaves.

HER DAIRY COMPOSITION

Little Helen was asked by her teacher to prepare a paper on "The Dairy Cow." She had visited a farm once only but did her best.

"A dairy farm is a place where they raise milk. It is a white substance that turns yellow and makes butter when it's disturbed. Sometimes they fasten on a suction sweeper to get it from the cow, but most usually they do it by hand. All cows are divided into two yards, cows and bulls. They look much alike although the latter have meaner dispositions."

DON'T LOSE REGISTRATION CARDS

Parents whose children will reach the age of 16 within the next month or so must take them to the post office and have them registered at the earliest possible date.

This provision of the Registration Act is not generally known. Parents failing to have their children register, even if they reach the age of 16 only a month or two after the present date may be subjected to much annoyance and trouble.

The Registration Act also provides that persons who were too ill to leave their homes before June 22nd or were otherwise legally prevented from calling at a registration office, can comply with the law by registering at the post office as soon as they are able to do so.

The losing of a registration certificate, through lack of proper precaution or care, may, under certain conditions, be considered as a serious offence and dealt with accordingly. Anyone losing his or her certificate must at once not later than the day after loss is discovered, apply for a new certificate at the post office. Under no conditions can anyone fail to have in his or her possession a certificate or registration as the law does not allow anyone to supply meals, lodging or transportation facilities to any person not able to produce such certificate when required to do so, the only exemption being transportation by street cars or tram cars.

Austrian seventh war loan, 5 per cent. Total subscriptions, $1,155,000,000.

Italian fourth war loan, 5 per cent. Total subscriptions, $1,000,000,000.

Hungary seventh war loan, 6 per cent. Total subscriptions, $600,000,000

Canadian Victory Loan, November 1917, 5½ per cent. Total subscriptions, $418,000,000.

MORE FISH USED

The Canada Food Board campaign to increase fish consumption is having results. In the Canadain army stationed or in training in Canada 200,000 pounds of beef were saved in the month of May, and approximately the same amount in the month of June by the substitution of fish. In the West a train load of that fish every day from Prince Rupert is sold at popular prices under the auspices of the Canada Food Board. In Toronto recently 100,000 pounds of mackerel were sold within one week as the result of a special campaign.

PUBLICITY Knows No Seasons

ADVERTISING, in spite of all the hard knocks it has received, continues to grow each year. It is essential. It is the power behind the selling organization. Take away the element of advertising and the business world would lie stagnant and at a standstill.

AND advertising knows no seasons—it just keeps everlastingly at it: the most efficient and persistent salesman on our payroll.

AFTER advertising all through your "regular season" you are losing mighty value publicity by discontinuing your "ad." People have now become accustomed to your store news and the time is coming when they are going to need something exactly in your line.

YOUR ad. is a constant reminder—if it appears regularly. The sign above your door is seen only by people who pass your store—an advertisement in The Walkerton Telescope—the paper that goes home, is seen and read by the majority of the people in Walkerton and vicinity each week. So don't make the mistake of advertising just in your particular "season"—keep your name before the public the year round.

Victory Bonds Destroyed

Mr. Geo. Mason, a patriotic citizen of Wingham, purchased $500.00 worth of Victory Bonds. On Thursday evening last he left them on a table and the next day, Mrs. Mason who was 'cleaning up' preparing for a trip to the West, gathered up the $500.00 Victory Bonds and put them in the stove with other old papers. The bonds looked like old brown sample paper and went up in smoke with other rubbish This should be a warning to others to guard their Victory Bonds.

Teeswater Boy Wins Fame

Capt. A. G. Field, son of Mr. Herb Field, some years ago a hardware merchant in Teeswater, has won considerable distinction at the front in France, having gone overseas with the 110th Perth Batt. Mayor Hord, of Mitchell, recently received a letter from R. W. M. McFarlane, Lieut-Col. commanding the 58th, Can. Batt, stating that he was shipping to Mitchell a German machine gun which was captured by a party lead by Capt. A. G. Field, and asking that on arrival of the gun it be handed over to Mr. Herb Field, father of the young soldier.

Married at Howick

Mr. Adam Hossfeld, a popular young Carrick farmer, sprung a pleasant surprise on his many friends here last Thursday, when he was quietly united in marriage to Miss Elfreda Kreller. The ceremony took place at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Kreller in Howick township. Rev. G. Brackabusch of Alafeldt officiating. After the ceremony, the happy young couple left on a wedding trip to Guelph, Toronto, London, Kitchener and Galt returning home on Monday. Mr. and Mrs. Hossfeld will take up residence on their fine farm on the Walkerton road.—Mildmay Gazette.

He was hurled from his seat and dragged several times around the field. When found the horses were standing in the fence corner, still attached to the mower, and Mr. McDonald was lying face down under the machine. Dr. McCulloch of Chatsworth was at once called but he could do nothing, as the victim had been dead for several hours. His watch had stopped at a few minutes after 3 o'clock. His hip was dislocated, his shoulder, nose and some ribs broken, and his body was a mass of cuts and bruises.

No Evaders in Keppel

The Wiarton Echo hands out the following in the last issue: A lack of knowledge of our conditions leads to some funny things in the county press. Recently we read that three or four evaders are hiding in the wilds of Keppel to escape service under the Military Service Act. Well, if anyone can hide long in Keppel he will have to dig in and stay. Then, too, when he reads of the evaders taking boats at the Sauble and rowing across the lake it makes one smile. The lake at this point has greater dimensions than a duck pond and a little brushing up would do the writer some good. Then, too, the Editor who saw a bear, rattlesnake, etc., on the Peninsula, should be glad to see something to relieve the monotony of life. Years ago, before the Ontario Temperance Act, snakes were seen in many southern parts of the County.

Bullet Through His Hat

Mr. Jake Swartman of Wubbaushene had a somewhat exciting experience and narrow escape while in pursuit of defaulters in the big swamp near Mud Lake, Township of Mara, on Tuesday morning. He was scouting for a party of eight or ten who were reported to be hiding there, when he suddenly came upon three of them. While he was reconnoitring their position one of them started off. Mr. Swartman called upon the other two to throw up their hands, but had to fire a shot to enforce his order. This attracted the attention of the man who had made off and while Mr. Swartman was gathering up the rifles of the other two, a bullet knocked his hat off his head. He turned on his assailant just in time to see him disappear. One of the other men bolted, but he managed to keep the third one, whom he brought to town, and placed him in the lock-up whence he will be taken to the military headquarters. Mr. Swartman is to be congratulated on his escape. It was as close a thing as he would be likely to encounter in France, short of actually being hit. Some of the young fellows who are using fire arms so freely in this district, do not seem to realize that if they are unfortunate enough to kill a member of the military police; it will be a case of murder, and they will almost certainly swing for it.—Collingwood Enterprise.

THRESHING IN ONTARIO

Gangs Available This Year to Relieve Situation.

A Proposed Plan of Organization—How to Overcome the Difficulties—Applications to Be Filed at Once.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

THE threshing gang is not an untried experiment in Ontario. In certain counties, Lambton for instance, these gangs have been employed and have proven very successful. Neither the threshermen nor the farmer in these cases care to return to the old methods of changing help with neighbors where men for the threshing gangs can be secured. The Ontario Department of Agriculture and the Ontario Trades and Labor Branch are now co-operating to make arrangements to ensure an ample supply of labor for as many threshing gangs as are likely to be organized this fall, and suggest herein methods of organizing a gang and a plan of organization.

The Difficulties—Overcome Them.

(1.) In the early part of harvest when many moves must be made and when comparatively small amounts of grain are threshed, the thresherman finds it difficult, often, to make a profit even under present methods. If he employs a gang his expenses will be much heavier. His charges therefore must be high enough so that later in the season he may regain what is lost at this time.

(2.) But at any time during the threshing season there may be considerable idleness during the frequent changes from farm to farm caused by the comparatively small amount of grain to be threshed on the average farm. By good organization this lost time may be limited to the minimum, however, by having the majority of the changes made at night.

Thresher Board Men.

(3.) If the farmer were obliged to board the gang a certain element of unfairness could not be avoided. It would seem, therefore, that the thresher should be responsible for this. The most convenient way in Ontario, perhaps, would be for the thresher to make arrangements with each farmer to provide meals for the men, the thresher to pay for the same.

(4.) It would seem necessary for each thresher to provide a sleeping van for his gang and the use of bedside blankets, as is done in the Northwest. These vans are home-made and one can be constructed for the average Ontario gang for about $180. If the thresher does his own building. Nothing ornate is required. A structure 10 feet wide by 12 feet long, built on trucks, wind-proof and rain-proof and with two tiers of bunks on each side would afford ample sleeping accommodation for an Ontario gang.

(5.) As several men constitute a gang the weekly wage sheet would run fairly high. This would involve a considerable regular expenditure on the part of the thresher, which in turn would necessitate prompt payment by farmers. Where gangs are employed it is necessary for farmers to give cash or 30-day notes immediately the job is done.

(6.) Probably the most important factor of all is the rates which the thresher will charge. These must, of course, be much higher than those charged formerly. This would make the threshing bill a fairly large sum. Yet the farmer could still make a profit by the transaction. If, by employing a gang, he were enabled in the two weeks thus saved to prepare an additional 10 acres, say for wheat, he would have from 250 to 350 extra bushels of this crop to sell in 1919.

Size of the Gangs.

(7.) The last problem is that of securing men. The average gang would probably consist of eight men as follows: Engineer, blower man, feeder, grainman and four men or stackmen. This would leave the farmer to take care of his straw and to supply another man to carry grain if one were not sufficient. A team of his horses would also be required to draw water. He would supply fuel, of course, as is now done.

In organizing a gang of this nature possibly not more than two or three could be secured in the locality where it was desired to operate. The Ontario Trades and Labor Branch will undertake to supply as many men as can be secured for this purpose. It is thought there will be no insuperable difficulty in securing sufficient men for this purpose at reasonable wages during the threshing months.

Where the silos are to be filled the same gangs, or as many men as are required, may be utilized for this purpose.

Organize a Gang In Your District.

It is suggested that farmers' clubs, other farmers' organizations, or groups of farmers without definite organization, consider at once the advisability of employing a threshing gang this fall. Call the local thresher to the meeting and confer with him regarding ways and means. Then, having reached a definite agreement, write Dr. W. A. Riddell, Superintendent Ontario Trades and Labor Branch, 15 Queen's Park, Toronto.

Inversely any thresher who wishes to organize a gang should write Dr. Riddell also. In every case it will be necessary for a thorough understanding to exist between the thresher and his patrons. When such is the case everything possible will be done to supply sufficient men for all threshing gangs required this year in Ontario. Apply to Dr. W. A. Riddell not later than July 10th.—Justus Miller, Assistant Commissioner of Agriculture.

TELESCOPE LETTER BOX

COMMUNICATION

Walkerton, Ont. June 16, 1918.

Editor Telescope

Dear Mr. Editor:—

In reading Rev. Mr. McLennan's report in your issue of last week regarding his services rendered during the last eight years as agent and Secretary of The Children's Aid Society of the County of Bruce, it is a creditable showing for the gentlemen who is around the 90th year mark. For his services he received the large sum of $180 per year and not even a bunch of daisies was given him on leaving said office. No doubt, after death the body will be given a bunch of roses.

His successor gets $1500 per year and automobile furnished him. What a nice job this would be for a returned soldier who has been fighting in Flanders. I wonder how much longer the people of this country will stand pat and every good job including Government jobs given to the civilian. A good many of them ought to be fighting or workingon a farm. Certain other jobs we know of have been going to ones who have been simply a voting machine for their party or a defeated politician etc. If the returned soldier was man enough to go and fight, then he has intelligence enough to draw a cheque or pay day and do what other office holders are doing, hire help to do the work for $\frac{1}{3}$ the pay they get themselves for sitting down on a job. If we do not do our duty with our returned boys, God only knows what may happen after the war It is true some will never come back but those who do with the help of the women of this country, they will see that the families of the heroes who have fallen in France and Flanders, get their rights and they themselves be given positions and the place they deserve and for which they fought. It is true a good many will come back maimed and the more reason why they should be given the recompense that is due them.

Yours truly,
John Rowland.

AN OPEN LETTER

July 11, 1918.

Mr. C. W. Cryderman.
Walkerton, Ont.

Dear Sir:—

I am sorry that a man of your standing and the position you hold should have told me today that the reason you put the item in the two London papers to the effect that the Walkerton Council, had refused to enter into a contract with the local Light Company was because a certain councillor had told you that such was the case. Since our conversation this afternoon I have interviewed the Mayor and the Councillors of the Town of Walkerton personally and asked them if they had told you anything about the Town Contract. Each and everyone of said councillors most emphatically tell me that they have not discussed the matterwith you at all, and they could not possibly tell you such a thing because Mr. David Robertson, President of The Walkerton Electric Light and Power Co. was the gentleman himself who brought the matter to the attention of the Council in that they could not give the company a new contract or even renew the existing contract without first submitting it to the people.

I hope you will be a big enough man to acknowledge that it must have been a dream on your part as I think the Council of Walkerton does not deserve to have it said that they should make a statement that they never made.

Yours truly,
John Rowland.

Capt. Shaw Home

Capt. Farquhar Shaw, who went Overseas as paymaster of the 160th. Bruce Batt'n, arrived home on leave last week and came up to Walkerton Saturday morning along with Mrs. Shaw, who has been staying at Fergus while her husband was Overseas. Capt Shaw is the picture of good health, the outdoors apparently have agreed with him immensely. On the breaking up up of the 160th. Batt'n last April Capt Shaw got over to France and obtained a post as paymaster of one of the fighting units, the 16th Batt'n 1st. Can. Division. A few weeks later Headquarters decided to cut in half the number of paymasters. These officers were then called together when Capt Shaw asked either to be kept at the Front or to be sent home, not wishing to remain in England where so many could be found to do the work. A short time afterwards he was transferred to London, Eng. He then secured leave and came home. It is likely that he will now obtain his discharge. Capt Shaw reached Walkerton on the same train as Arthur Ferrar, and they were greeted by a multitude, about 35 or 40 auto loads of citizens at the G. T. R. Station. A Public Reception is being tendered these men, and Charlie Bryce at the Town Hall Thursday night.

lookers hold their breath. A few moments later and it is tripping lightly around above the tree tops turning this way or that to the response of the skilled hand on the joy stick.

Did Some Stunts

About 4 o'clock p. m. the relief plane from Camp Borden arrived and after circling gracefully around the town landed near the Grand Trunk station This machine was driven by a skilled aviator, a lieutenant, who was accompanied by an Air Mechanic. On learning the location of the first plane they flew to Mr. Simpson's farm and made a graceful lighting in an adjoining field. By this time there were hundreds of citizens on the scene as witness " the manoeverings. Shortly after six o'clock the party got away and after giving quite a hair-raising exhibition flying at a low altitude over the residential part of the town, returned their course Camp Bordenward And now every kid in Walkerton is forward joining the Flying Corps!

Parcel Delivery Proposed

The merchants are again figuring on a general parcel delivery for the town and we hope in the interest of war-time economy, good service for the public and the merchants themselves that the scheme will be put through this time and not be allowed to drop on past occasions. The idea is to have two morning deliveries at stated hours two deliveries each afternoon, and Saturday night delivery as well. Is no reason why one motor truck should not handle the whole delivery for town and do it much better than has been done by boys, some not responsible, during past years. The scheme is no experiment. It has been tried and thoroughly proved in other towns. Walkerton should have had general delivery years ago. Let us have it now!

Miss Gertrude Jackson who has been teaching school at Dawson City for the past two years has arrived in town and is staying with her parents, Rev. and Mrs. Jackson. Miss Jackson who has been a contributor to the Canadian Magazine and other publications, went to the Yukon party as an adventure to get "color" and "atmosphere" for magazine stories. Asked whether Dawson City was a woolly place, she said it was just the opposite. People never think of locking their doors when they go out there. It is absolutely dark for a part of the year but business and everything else goes on just the same with the aid of the electric light. The mercury drops as low as 62 below in the winter.

The death of Mr. Thomas Rogers occurred at his home here on Monday, July 8th at the age of 75 years. Deceased was born in Northumberland county. About 32 years ago he married Miss Catharie Boyd at Hanover. They moved to Scone where they lived several years and then went to Walkerton. They moved to Hanover 11 years ago. The marriage was blessed with 7 children all living as follows: Pearl and Margaret of Mitchell, Hattie and Mattie of Hanover and David of London.

Mrs. Con. Schaat arrived home after a 3 weeks' trip on the lakes from Toronto to Fort William. It was very rough and Mrs. Schaff was not very much taken with a boat trip as a result.

Local Merchants' Opportunity

In conversation with a weekly newspaperman a few days ago the representative of a Toronto firm expressed the opinion that the day of the town merchant had returned if he only realized it. He pointed out the cost of doing business in the big cities had mounted so high during the past three years that the departmental stores could no longer afford to give real bargains any more, but that the country merchant, whose costs have not risen in proportion, could undersell the big fellow on almost any article. This seems to be a well founded statement, for a few weeks ago the wife of a wage-earner in a nearby town wanted to get a suit of clothes for her little boy. She first visited the local stores that sell that class of goods, examined the quality and got prices. She saw an ad. of the departmental store making a special sale of boys' suits and she went to the city next day intending to take advantage of the bargain. In the departmental store she found prices much higher for a poorer quality of goods. As a result she bought her boy a suit at the local store. This is an actual happening. But country merchants have got into a rut and it is realy doubtful if they will wake up and take full advantage of the opportunities that present themselves today. The war, which has turned everything upside down, has created opportunities at every turn. By intelligent, up-to-date newspaper advertising the local merchant, providing he gives value and lives up to his advertising, can greatly increase his business. Under present normal conditions, more so than for many years, the town merchant has his opportunity to grasp what logically should be his own.

Forethought and Good Judgment Used

Travellers show preference for Scenic Route: Busy Men use Night Trains

Nowadays, forethought, and a lively sense of public appreciation play an important part in the construction of a railroad. The Canadian Northern made a happy choice in the selection of its route between Toronto and Ottawa: skirting the shoreline of Lake Ontario and the Bay of Quinte; over the height of land between Nagonee and Sydenham; and through Rideau Lakes region, adjacent to the daytime journey in Spring or Summer. Comfortable day and night trains, stopping at principal intermediate stations, have made the route very popular.

A Tale of Youth and Summer Time and the Baxter Family, Especially William

By

BOOTH TARKINGTON

Copyright, 1916, 1918, by Metropolitan Magazine.

"Hum, Bannie, run!" panted Jane. "I got to get home an'tell mamma about it before Willie! I bet I ketch Hail Columbia, anyway, when he does get there!"

And in this she was not mistaken: she caught Hail Columbia. It lasted all afternoon.

It was still continuing after dinner that evening, when an oft repeated yodel, followed by a shrill wailed "Jane-ee! Oh, Jane-ree-ee!" brought her to an open window downstairs. In the early dusk she looked out upon the washed face of Bannie Kirsted, who stood on the lawn below. "Come on out, Janie. Mamma says I can stay outdoors an' play till half past 8."

Jane shook her head. "I can't. I can't go outside the house till tomorrow. It's because we walked after Willie with our stummicks out o' joint."

"Can't you come out at all?" Bannie urged. "Go ask your mother. Tell her"—

"How can I?" Jane inquired, with a little heat. "When she isn't here to ask! She's gone out to play cards, she and papa."

Bannie swung her foot. "Well," she said, "I guess I hat to find somep'n to do. G'night!"

With head bowed in thought she moved away. Jane, on her part, left the window and went to the open front door. Conscientiously, she did not cross the threshold, but restrained herself to looking out. On the steps of the porch sat William alone, his back toward the house.

"Willie," said Jane softly, and, as he made no response, she lifted her voice a little. "Will-ee!"

"Whatchwant?" he grunted, not moving.

"Willie, I told mamma I was sorry I made you feel so bad."

"All right!" he returned curtly.

"Well, when I hat to go to bed, Willie," she said, "mamma told me because I made you feel bad I hat to go upstairs by myself tonight."

She paused, seeming to hope that he would say something, but he spoke not.

"Willie, I don't hat to go for awhile yet, but when I do—maybe in about a half an hour—I wish you'd come stand at the foot of the stairs till I get up there. The light's in upstairs, but down around here it's kind of dark."

He did not answer.

"Will you, Willie?"

"Oh, all right," he said.

This contented her, and she seated herself so quietly upon the floor just inside the door that he ceased to be aware of her, thinking she had gone away. He sat staring vacantly into the darkness, which had come on with that abruptness which begins to be noticeable in September. His elbows were on his knees, and his body was sunk far forward in an attitude of dejection.

The small noises of the town—that town so empty tonight—fell upon his ears mockingly. It seemed to him incredible that so hollow a town could go about its nightly affairs just as usual. A man and a woman going by laughed loudly at something the man had said. The sound of their laughter was horrid to William. And from a great distance—from far out in the country—there came the faint, long drawn whistle of an engine.

That was the sorrowfulest sound of all to William. His lonely mind's eye sought the hazy spaces of the east—crossed prairie and river and hill to where a long train whizzed onward through the dark, farther and farther and farther away. William uttered a sigh so hoarse, so deep from the tombs, so prolonged, that Jane, who had been relaxing herself at full length upon the floor, sat up straight with a jerk. But she was wise enough not to speak.

Now the full moon came masquerading among the branches of the shade trees. It came in the likeness of an enormous football, gloriously orange. Gorgeously it rose higher, cleared the trees and resumed its wonted impersonation of a silver disk. Here was another mockery. What was the use of a moon now?

There came from a little distance down the street the sound of a young male voice, singing. It was not a musical voice, yet sufficiently loud, and it knew only a portion of the words and air it sought to render; but, upon completing the portion it did know, it instantly began again and sang that portion over and over with brightest patience. Thus:

> "My countree, 'tis of thee,
> Sweet land of liber-tee,
> My countree, 'tis of thee,
> Sweet land of liber-tee.
> My countree, 'tis of thee,
> Sweet land of liber-tee.
> My countree, 'tis of thee,
> Sweet land of liber-tee,
> My countree, 'tis"—

Jane spoke unconsciously. "It's Freddie," she said.

William leaped to his feet. This was something he could not hear. He made a bloodthirsty dash toward the gate, which the singer was passing.

"You get out o' here!" William roared.

The song stopped. Freddie Banks fled like a rag on the wind.

Now here is a strange matter.

The antique prophets prophesied successfully; they practiced with some ease that art since lost, but partly rediscovered by M. Maeterlinck, who proves to us that the future already exists, simultaneously with the present. Well, if his proofs be true, then at this very moment when William thought meaningly of Freddie Banks, the bright air of a happy June evening—an evening ordinarily reckoned ten years, nine months and twenty-one days in advance of this present sorrowful evening—the bright air of that happy June evening, so far in the future, was actually already trembling to a wedding march played upon a church organ, and this self same Freddie, with a white flower in his buttonhole and in every detail accoutred as a wedding usher, was an usher for this very William who now (as we ordinarily count time) threatened his person.

But for more miracles!

As William turned again to resume his meditations upon the steps his incredulous eyes fell upon a performance amazingly beyond fantasy and without parallel as a means to make scorn of him. Not ten feet from the porch, and in the white moonlight that made brilliant the path to the gate, Miss Mary Randolph Kirsted was walking. She was walking with insulting pomposity in her most pronounced semi-circular manner.

"You get out o' here!" she said in a voice as deep and hoarse as she could make it. "You get out o' here!"

Her intention was as plain as the moon. She was presenting in her own person a sketch of William, by this means expressing her opinion of him and avenging Jane.

"You get out o' here!" she croaked.

The shocking audacity took William's breath. He gasped.

"Why, you—you!"— he cried. "You—you scaty faced little girl!"

In this fashion he directly addressed Miss Mary Randolph Kirsted for the first time in his life.

And that was the strangest thing of this strange evening, strangest because, as with life itself, there was nothing remarkable upon the surface of it. But if M. Maeterlinck has the right of the matter and if the bright air of that June evening, almost eleven years in the so called future, was indeed already trembling to "Lohengrin," then William stood with Johnnie Watson against a great bank of flowers at the door of a church aisle, that aisle was roped with white satin ribbons, and William and Johnnie were waiting for something important to happen. And then, to the strains of "Here Comes the Bride," it did—a stately, solemn, roseate, gentle young thing with bright eyes seeking through a veil for William's eyes.

Yes, if great M. Maeterlinck is right, it seems that William ought to have caught at least some eerie echo of that wedding march, however faint—some bars or strains adrift before their time upon the moonlight of this September night in his eighteenth year.

For there, beyond the possibility of any fate to intervene or of any later vague, fragmentary memory of even Miss Pratt to impair, there in that moonlight was his future before him.

He started forward furiously. "You you—you little"—

But he paused, not wasting his breath upon the empty air.

His bride to be was gone.

THE END.

He Lumped It.

"My coffee is not quite sweet enough," remarked he.

"Well, if you don't like it I suppose you'll have to lump it," said she, with a smile, passing the loaf sugar his way.

BEST TOOLS FOR GARDEN

Laying Hens Are More Profitable Than Ever.

Frequent Change of Pasture Protects Lambs from Disease and Ensure Steady Gains — Annual Pasture Has Proven Satisfactory.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

MOST gardeners use a hoe, rake, spade, and digging fork in their gardens. The three last are used chiefly during spring preparation of the soil and again in the fall during the harvesting of the crop. The hoe, however, is used almost all summer.

Most people in buying tools simply take what is offered, never considering that in using the heavier types soil in many stores much energy is spent in handling these, that could be used more profitably in doing other garden work. Besides, it is expected that women and children will do much of the garden work this season and it is necessary to give them implements suited to their strength.

For these reasons it has been urged on the gardeners to buy a hoe called the triangle, onion or beet hoe with a cutting edge 4½ inches wide. This hoe is light to handle and does very satisfactory work, especially close in around the plants in the row. With it should be used the "Buco" type of cultivator with the two outside tynes removed. These two tools will do better work than any of the ordinary hoes with a great deal less expenditure of strength and in shorter time.

Where one has a larger garden, say 60 x 100 feet, it will be well to invest in a wheel hoe to help out the two above-mentioned tools. With the "Buco" to make a deeper mulch after a heavy rain or continuous tramping over the soil, the small hoe for close weeding, the wheel hoe makes it much easier to maintain a good mulch during the dry season, thus conserving moisture and advancing plant growth.—A. H. MacLennan, B.S.A., Ontario Vegetable Specialist.

HOT WEATHER POULTRY CALENDAR.

The hen that laid 126 eggs in 1917 made the same profit as the 123-egg hen in 1914.

The hen that laid less than 123 eggs in 1917 made a smaller profit than in 1914.

The hen that laid more eggs than 123 in 1917 made a larger profit than in 1914.

In view of the high price of feed can the farmer afford to keep the poor-laying hens in 1918?

The rooster, unless kept for next year's breeding, is too expensive a luxury to keep—and he'll help relieve the meat shortage.

The market for the cull stock promises to be good this month—and by marketing in June the distribution is more equalized.

The good layer of the yellow-legged breeds at this season loses the color from the feet and bill and these later becoming almost white. The sleek plumaged, fat yellow-legged hens are usually very poor layers. It will pay to cull them out now.

The abdominal cavity, or the space between the pelvic bones (situated under the tail) and the end of the breast or keel bones should be relatively soft and flexible. If it is full of hard fat the hen is usually a very indifferent layer.

As a rule the earlier maturing pullets are the earlier and most profitable layers. By marking these the best breeders may be selected.

In grading up a laying flock pure-bred eggs should be purchased. From the chicks good female breeding stock may be secured. The male may be secured in very many cases in Ontario, from eggs secured by children taking part in school fairs. Watch the school fair winners this year.

It saves work to let the hens feed themselves—a hopper may be built at home without great expense.

Keep hens that lay over 100 eggs yearly and feed them carefully; kill the rooster and sell infertile eggs; gather the eggs daily and keep in a cool place in clean baskets; send the eggs to market quickly and regularly.—Prof. W. H. Graham.

Summer Forage for Lambs.

Frequent change of pasture is beneficial to, and relished by, all classes of stock and this applies with special emphasis to the case of sheep. It is true for two reasons. Sheep are subject to parasitic disease which may be prevented to a large extent by not pasturing up any one area for too great a length of time. In addition to this they are possibly more fastidious about their food than some other farm animals. It is not practicable on every farm to arrange for a succession of pastures during the grazing season. However, the same area will sustain considerable more sheep if such an arrangement is feasible. Rye sown early in the fall furnishes a good deal of pasture in the late fall and early spring. After the rye is eaten off in the spring rape may be sown on this land and will come along for pasture in June or July. Alfalfa and red clover are satisfactory pasture crops and will serve until the rape is ready. An annual pasture consisting of one bushel each of wheat, oats and barley together with eight pounds of red clover provides a good pasture for the early summer months, and the clover coming along in the autumn will give a nice picking. This annual pasture may be sown any time early in May. Without a great deal of additional labor it is possible to have a succession of crops ready for seeding throughout the entire season. The increase in health and condition of the flock will amply repay any such outlay of time and expense.—J. P. Sackville, B.S.A., Ontario Agricultural College.

DAMAGE BY LIGHTNING

Proper Rodding Would Have Prevented $331,450 Loss.

Caring for Lambs at Weaning—Different Ways Fruits and Vegetables May Be Used as Substitutes for Foods Our Army Requires.

Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.]

As a comprehensive conclusion from our investigations, we have found that if all the buildings in rural Ontario were rodded more than 95 per cent. of the annual damage to buildings by lightning would be prevented. The method by which this conclusion was arrived at was as follows: In 1913 eighteen insurance companies in Ontario kept special records for us; from their reports we learned that out of every 7,000 unrodded buildings insured by them 27 were struck by lightning, while in every 7,000 rodded ones only two were struck by lightning. The rods prevented damage in 25 cases out of an efficiency of 27, showing an efficiency of 94.7 p.c. Since that we have determined the efficiency for the years 1913, 1914 and 1915. The results for the four years are as follows:

Year.	Efficiency of Rods.
1912	94.7
1913	92.0
1914	99.8
1915	88.9
Average for four years	97.2

We apply these figures: The report of the Superintendent of Insurance shows that in 1912 the insurance paid on losses caused by lightning was $232,212. No doubt the actual loss exceeded the insurance by perhaps 1-3 or ¼. If so, the actual loss was $350,000 or over. 94.7 per cent. of this equals $331,450, which represents the saving that would have been effected that year if all the buildings had been rodded.

Investigations along similar lines in Iowa have shown an efficiency of 96.7 p.c. for rods in that state, based on the report of 55 mutual companies each year for eight years. In Michigan the efficiency of lightning rods has been shown to be from 98 to 99 p.c.

These few facts, which are all matters of record in published reports, establish beyond question the conclusion first given, that if all buildings in rural Ontario were rodded 95 p.c. of the annual lightning damage to buildings would be eliminated.—F. W. H. Day, Ontario Agriculture College.

Care of the Weanling Lamb.

The best results lambs should be weaned at between four and five months. It has been found that under conditions prevailing during the summer months of mid-summer the lambs will drop off considerably in their milk flow. The lambs receive comparatively little nourishment and Sunday better for both ewe and lamb and them to be separated. When the lambs are removed from the ewes they will miss little the small amount of milk they would receive and will soon learn to depend upon pasture. They should receive the very best pasture available. Nothing fits in better than a patch of rape sown at the proper time so as to be ready for pasture when the lambs are weaned. Care should be exercised in turning the lambs on the fresh rape to avoid bloating and probable death. The rape is available fresh clover will give satisfactory results. In addition to pasture a feed of grain once a day will push the lambs along to a good finish. At no time should it be necessary to feed over one-half pound of grain per day to each lamb while on pasture.—J. P. Sackville, B.S.A., Ontario Agricultural College.

Uses of Fruits and Vegetables.

The drastic regulations set forth by the Canada Food Board lately, have caused much anxiety to many people who feel that they must now choose between either being considered unpatriotic, or going without sufficient food to nourish their bodies.

This is a mistaken idea. In their distress they have forgotten for a moment to recall the long list of available substitutes which can wholly replace the Allies' demands, and remember that foremost among these are fruits and vegetables. Fresh vegetables not only contain a high percentage of water—a necessary requirement of our bodies—but, in a large amount of mineral salts and acids which act as blood purifiers and body regulators; they also serve to prevent too great concentration of urea and thus aid in the digestive process. Dried vegetables on the other hand, are rich in tissue-building material, dried peas and beans containing as much protein as our best cut of beef, in addition to containing a large percentage of starch.

While fruits are usually noted more for their flavor, mineral matter and water than for anything else, still we must not forget that bananas, dates, figs, raisins and prunes are high in food value, some containing as high as 60 p.c. of sugar. For this reason they are a valuable substitute for cane sugar. They might well be given to children in place of candy, and when served in combination with puddings, or salads, reduce the amount of sugar needed and add much to the value of the dish.

Vegetables and fruits should form a large part of the diet during the winter as well as the summer months, and it is therefore to our advantage to see that they are canned or dried at the proper time for future use. Much valuable information on the canning and drying of fruits and vegetables may be secured from the Women's Institute Branch, Ontario Department of Agriculture.—Geo. A. Putnam, Superintendent of Women's Institutes.

TOWN AND DISTRICT NEWS

Miss Lenora Doepel returned to Kitchener on Saturday after spending a week with Mrs W. Widmeyer and Miss Hilda Ermel.

Mr. and Mrs. Jos. Kenny and daughter Miss Alberta, and Mrs. Jas. Meagher are in Hamilton attending the reception for Miss Irene Kenny and will also visit Guelph friends.

Mrs. Jos. Brechler and three children, who have been visiting the former's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Becker for the past two months, left Wednesday morning to visit relatives in Kircardine and Detroit prior to leaving for their home in Fernie, B. C.

Garden parties will soon be a thing of the past. If the war continues another year and indications are that it will—it is improbable that garden parties and such functions will be held. At several affairs held thus far this year there was a conspicuous absence of meat and those large dainty layer cakes with tasty icing and filling, and sugar, instead of being displayed on the tables, was passed by waiters in small quantities, all of which impresses one with the fact that war conditions and food regulations will soon play havoc with these events.

The following story has the genuine atmosphere of the Green Isle about it. "The following incident, which tells of a horse that connived at the evasion of lawful debts, need not be taken precisely as a matter of fact. An old Wexford farmer related it in praise of his sagacious and venerable mare. 'This five and twenty years I do be riding her, and sorrow the mistake she ever made but just the one time that she took and ran away with me half a mile, because she met poor Jim Malloy at the crossroads beyond Loughlinlegg. And, bedad, small blame to her for that, considering Jim's the living image of his brother, Dan, that I was owing more than the price of herself to, as she very well knew!'"

Forty Years An Editor

The Acton Free Press has just completed its fortieth year under the able editorship of Mr. H. P. Moore. The Free Press is a clean, live, up-to-date sheet and in many respects the model small-town newspaper of this Province. The publisher is a man of high ideals, and forty years of service in the public interest, finds him not an old man, but rather at his best. We wish Brother Moore and his excellent paper many more successful years.

Training In Sunny South

Pte. Henry Miller, an old Walkerton boy, writes his sister, Miss Jean Miller, from Camp Gremont, California: "It is very dry and warm here. We haven't had rain since we came. I went to San Francisco last Saturday until Sunday night, was also at Ocatune Beach at Oakland where we had quite a good time. I took a few snaps with my kodak and will send you some after a bit. Four of us boys in this tent are from North Dakota and we feel quite proud of it.

Predict Gasoline Shortage

Although at the present time the gasoline supply throughout western Ontario is sufficient to meet ordinary demands, garage men and oil dealers of Windsor agree that before the year is out a real shortage will be experienced. Tank cars which have been conveying oil to all parts of the country, and a majority of which are owned by American railroads, are being rapidly called in by the United States railroad administration, as they are needed to carry fuel to the seaboard, and this will mean that many interior points far from the main arteries of railroad travel will be left without facilities for obtaining gasoline.

More "B" Men May Be Called

Although men in category B under the Military Service Act have been called to the colors recently, another call is not improbable in the near future as fureatny and other non-combatant units are in need of men. According to the Registrar of Ontario men in category B are now permitted to enlist in the Royal Air Force as mechanics if they so desire. Upwards of 2,000 B men have had their claims disallowed by Appeal Tribunals except on medical grounds and a number of the men are likely to be called in the near future. The permission to enlist in the R. A. F. holds good only as long as the infantry does not need the men's services.

Nineteen-year old men are to be permitted to join any branch of the service voluntarily which is now open for recruits. It is stated at the Registrar's office that in the cases of persons who have lost their Military service papers duplicates can be had at that office at a small cost.

Three men were fined $10 and costs each at Flesherton for fishing on the Sabbath.

Misses Mary Wilhelm, Margaret Dales, Stella Bush and Mary Hauch spent Sunday with the latter's brother near Formosa.

Photographic copies of marriage certificates will not be honored by the Dominion police at Sarnia unless sworn to before a justice of the peace or police magistrate that the copy is a true and correct one. Many citizens have had photographs made of their marriage certificates, and unless they have them sworn to they will be regarded as not having their certificates on their person and will be liable to a fine.

Mrs. Swarts of the Queen's hotel, Wingham, is pressed for help and announces that she will only serve bed and breakfast. The Toronto Sun was advocating abolishing commercial travellers in the interest of war-time economy, and this will surely put some of them out of business. They'll never last long on a meal a day.—Listowel Banner.

The Owen Sound town council has the progressive spirit and at their last meeting, according to The Times, "most of the important business of the evening was a motion by John McQuaker, authorizing a special committee to procure a suitable landing-place in town for aeroplanes. With recent developments in aerial navigation, it is imperative, says The Times, that Owen Sound make preparation for the future, and secure and prepare a suitable spot for landing."

Who's Who In Legislature

There are in the Ontario Legislature twenty-six farmers, twenty-six lawyers nine manufacturers, five merchants, eight doctors, seven lumbermen, four insurance agents, two "workingmen," two agents, an undertaker, an auctioneer, one "gentleman," a realty agent, an accountant, a dentist, a contractor, a veterinary surgeon and a clergymen.

Accidents At Barn Raising

Two rather serious accidents occurred at a barn raising at the farm of William Jackson, Bentinck Township, near Chesley last Thursday. Donald McGregor fell from the plates sixteen feet to the floor, injuring his arm severely. Willie Ramage, a lad, while walking around the house, fell into a cellarway, breaking his left arm.

Penalties For Breaking Food Laws

"Any person violating any provision or any order or regulation of the Canada Food Board now or hereafter made in pursuance of the power invested upon it, is guilty of an offence, and shall be liable upon summary conviction before a Police Magistrate or a Justice of the Peace to a penalty not exceeding $1,000, and not less than $100.00; or to imprisonment". By Order-in-Council P. C. (1542) of June 22nd, 1918. The enforcement of the orders and regulations of the Canada Food Boards depends principally upon the patriotic co-operation of the municipal police authorities.

A Busy Month

Inspector H. W. Elliot of the Children's Aid Society has not been letting grass grow under his feet according to the report submitted to the Executive at the monthly meeting last week. The month's activities included:—2 Branch Committees organized, 6 Applications for children, 17 Complaints received regarding children, 19 Investigations, 43 Mail received, 30 Mail sent out, 5 Meetings addressed, 687 Miles (approximate) covered, 7 Office interviews, 29 Phone messages, 32 Places visited outside the town, 2 Police Court attendance, 1 ward placed out, 1 ward returned to shelter, 22 Wards visited, 11 warnings given. Over 60 children dealt with during the month, and as one week was spent in Toronto attending the Annual conference of Children's Aid Societies, there were 19 days to cover this work making an average of over 3 children dealt with each day.

WHICH JUDGE IS RIGHT?

An eastern judge the other day found a man guilty of disorderly conduct for kissing his wife when she didn't want him to kiss her.

"It is a woman's inalienable right to refuse to be kissed," this judge said, adding, "and she doesn't forfeit this right when she marries the man."

But, on the other hand Judge Graham, of San Francisco, rules that a husband may kiss his wife whenever he pleases, whether it pleases the wife or not.

Indeed so firm are the judge's convictions upon the subject that he was moved to put his decision in verse:

Be a cave man, seize your mate.
If she shows you signs of hate;
Let her struggle, let her bite,
But kiss her boy; it is your right.

The Calgary Albertan has increased its subscription price to $7.50 a year.

Mr. Henry Spitzig was in New Germany on Monday attending the funeral of his mother-in-law, Mrs. Rheinhart.

Pte. Fred Kenny writes to a friend in town that he has arrived in France and expects to reach the firing line soon.

Mr. Will Seigmiller of Petersburg and Miss Klemmer of Listowel spent a few days with Mr. and Mrs. Adam Seigmiller.

Mrs. Jos. Lindsay returned from Toronto last week. Mrs. Lindsay underwent an operation for internal trouble while in the city and is now much improved in health.

Mrs. P. Ritchie attended the funeral of the late Miss Mary Orr Ritchie, on S. Culrossen Friday. The deceased who was a sister of Mrs. Ritchie's son-in-law, was in her 66th. year. Interment was made in Teeswater cemetery.

The New York Evening Sun observes that "King George has been learning to throw a baseball, but hopes he won't go so far as to take to chewing gum in public just to please America. Not likely. And he will still continue to call an elevator a "lift," and a freight train a "goods train," and private schools "public schools," and candies "sweets" and a street car a "tram", and a railway car a "carriage," and a conductor a "guard."

Many complaints have appeared in the newspapers in various parts of Ontario concerning money orders enclosed in letters sent to Montreal never reaching the intended destination. Most of the money was sent with orders for booze. Dishonest postal employees took advantage of the situation and rifled the letters of their contents and threw the letters down a sewer. If any reader is wondering what happened to the cash he sent to the Quebec metropolis, this information may ease his mind even though his thirst abideth.

Ford's Submarine Chasers

The factory at Detroit in which Ford is constructing submarine chasers is three-quarters of a mile from either end to the center of the plant. It is anticipated that 40,000 men will be engaged in the construction of these chasers and the output is expected to reach one ship per day.

Twenty Sheep For Every Soldier

Twenty sheep are required to provide sufficient wool to keep one soldier clothed. In Canada there are less than 21 sheep per soldier. Wool is at record price, as is also mutton. The Canada Food Board urges greater production of sheep and municipal co-operation in controlling the menance from dogs.

Unskilled Supplications

A Scotch minister was asked to pray for rain and his prayer was followed by such a downpour that the crops were injured. During the storm one old farmer said to another: "This comes o' trusting sic a request to a meenister who isna aquaintit with agriculture."

Draftee Secures Exemption

Mr. Otto Johann, who lives with his mother and works a 100 acre farm on the Hawick townline near Belmore, has been granted temporary exemption. His is an extreme case, and the militia department considered that he was entitled to exemption until such time as it will be necessary to call men in his condition.

WE HAVE 'EM HERE

Renfrew Journal.

Some of these days somebody will "be pinched" for allowing his car to be driven by a boy or girl under 18 years of age. A number of owners in this vicinity are violating this regulation. Motor cars are so numerous now that great caution should be observed in the public safety. Where two swiftly moving vehicles are coming into dangerous and unexpected proximity a young driver cannot be depended upon to do the right thing and serious, if not fatal, consequences are likely to follow. Even old drivers often find themselves in tight places unexpectedly and frequently they fail to do the proper thing. Several have complained to the editor about fourteen year old girls and boys driving cars up and down our streets. They have threatened to enter complaints to the constable.

A Sidelight on The Clothing Situation

Last week we received a letter from one of the largest manufacturers of men's and boys' clothing in Canada which in part reads as follows:-

"To give you some idea as to the condition of the Woolen Market, there has been only on woolen mill in Canada so far that has accepted any orders for next Spring and this particular mill is asking such high prices that we have found it almost impossible to handle the goods they are showing. There is practically nothing whatever coming out from England and the little that is coming out is costing from 400 500 per cent over and above pre-war time prices.

Receipts Were Over $325

The most successful garden party held in Brant this summer was that which was held at the beautiful home of Mr. and Mrs. B. J. Waechter, three miles west of the town, on Wednesday evening of last week under the auspices of the South Bruce Women's Institute. The grounds and house were beautifully decorated with flags, bunting and Chinese lanterns. The evening was an ideal one for such an occasion and the crowd which gathered was a very large one. The program was also very good and included solos by little Miss Lamberton, Miss Ermel and Miss Hiebn; addresses by Messrs H. M. Lay, Jno. Purvis, Frank Rennie and John Rowland; violin selection by the Misses Scanlon and Connors; and the main feature which proved a pleasant surprise for most of those present was several Scotch songs by Mr. Millard Stauffer of Toronto. Mr. W. A. Burrows made a very efficient chairman. The ice cream booth, the raffling and fortune telling by Miss Barkley, Miss Boether and Miss Wahn all added to the pleasure of the crowd and assisted in increasing the proceeds. Mrs. Ben Mitchell drew the lucky number for the chair and Mr. Stewart, of the Agricultural Office, drew the number for the box of Chocolates. Both articles were later auctioned by Mr. Purvis and brought a good price. The total proceeds amounted to the magnificent sum of over $325. A great deal of credit is due the members of the Women's Institute for the success of their garden party, but more especially is credit due to Mr. and Mrs. Waechter, who opened their home for the purpose and also devoted unstintingly, their time and energy to make it a success. Mr. Purvis, in concluding his address, voiced the opinion of those present when he said he hoped that he would soon be privileged to spend such another enjoyable evening at Benny Waechter's.

KNOX'S NEW PASTOR

Rev. William H Burgess B.A., B.D., who has been tendered a call to the pastorate of Knox Church, Walkerton, is a young man with a splendid record behind him and abundant promise of a useful career of consecrated service ahead. Mr. Burgess is a graduate in Arts and Theology of Queen's University and of Queen's Theological College, Kingston. He received his B. D. degree in 1909; his Testamur in 1912; and his B. D. degree in 1913. On graduating in Theology in 1912 he was asked to take charge of the Presbyterian Pacific Coast Missions. There, by means of a steam launch, he visited the lumber camps along the coast and carried on a much appreciated work among the lumbermen. Two years later a call came to him from St. Pauls, a large rural charge on the outskirts of Chatham which he accepted, and he has labored at St.Pauls since that time. Mr. Burgess has won golden opinions wherever he has been and has had the confidence and esteem of his fellow ministers. At Chatham he is the President of the Ministerial Association of that city. He is president of the Kent County Branch of the Ontario Sunday School Association, and Convenor of the Committee on Sunday Schools and Young People's Societies of the Synod of Hamilton and London. In view of the conditions and needs of today he has expressed himself as particularly interested in the work of religious education.

The call to Rev. Mr. Burgess will be considered by Bruce Presbytery at a special meeting to be held here next Tuesday at 4.30 p. m. If the call is sustained by the Presbytery and translation granted by Chatham Presbytery, we believe that both pastor and people will have good reason to anticipate a happy and fruitful pastorate.

Evader Captured In Swamp

It is reported that a Greenock young man named Letzkus, who has been evading the military authorities for several months, was gathered in at the Greenock swamp by Chief Farrel of Kincardine. Letzkus, it is reported, went into Glamis one day last week to buy some goods at a store, and this led to his arrest.

Medals Won By Bruce Boys

The Medals which were won by the Lions Head platoon, C. Co. 160th Batt'n, as champions, of all Canadians in British Isles, for barbed wiring are on exhibition in Mr. C. Reichenbach's jewelry window. They were brought home from England by Major Moffat and are to be sent to Wiarton in a few days for distribution. This barb-wiring team which was in command of Capt. R. C Rowland, with Lieut. Pettigrew in charge of the team made a great name for itself. The team was used for demonstrating purposes before the forces in England and France.

Walkerton Boy's Big Job

LESLIE L. GRABILL

One of the highest offices in the Canadian railway world has fallen to a native of Walkerton, Leslie L. Grabill. Mr. Grabill who is a comparatively young man, has been appointed General Baggage Agent for the entire Grand Trunk System. Mr. Grabill was born at Walkerton, his father, Mr. John Grabill conducting a waggon shop for many years on Scott St., a short distance east of the Town Hall. He entered the Grand Trunk Service at Montreal in 1897, and had a phenomenal rise from the ranks, having been freight porter, baggage porter, checker, baggage agent and chief clerk in the general baggage department previous to his appointment as assistant general baggage agent nine years ago.

Ladies Can Help

If, in canning their fruit, the ladies of the town will put by a jar or two for the hospital it will be very much appreciated and the Social Committee of the Ladies Hospital Aid will arrange for collecting it in the Fall.

Name Omitted

To The Mothers

Miss Havill, who will assist the young lady who is sent to train the children, would like every child in Walkerton and the surrounding country to be at the tent on the school grounds at nine o'clock each morning, except Sunday, to take part in the games and contests. A brilliant and moving tableaux will be presented by the children on the last day. Children's tickets from the age of six to fourteen may be had for $1.00 and will admit them to every programme, morning, afternoon and evening the entire week.

Brant Boy Seriously Wounded

A cablegram received by Mr. Louis Voelzing of Hanover on Monday announced that his son, Wesley, had been seriously wounded by shrapnel on July 13th and was in a hospital in France. Wesley, who enlisted early last year, signing up with the 258th Grey Batt'n and afterwards being transferred to the 35th Toronto Battalion. He had been five months in France. In his last letter he said he was fine and fit, and described how he had visited a farm near the front line and helped a farmer's wife milk a cow and churn, getting in return a coveted glass of sweet milk.

An Ideal Trip

Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Clancy and daughters, Agnes and Basila, have arrived home from an enjoyable two weeks' trip to Detroit, Durand, Mich, Toledo, Cleveland, O., and intervening points. The trip from Walkerton to Detroit was covered by motor, going via Goderich, Grand Bend Chatham, and Windsor. This magnificent stretch of country not to be beaten anywhere is at this time of year at its best. The green crops along the way looked splendid and further south in Essex, the tobacco, corn and fruit give promise of an abundant yield. From Detroit they took one of the D & C palatial steamers to Cleveland, O. Mr. Clancy has always liked Detroit but when he saw the wide streets, open squares and great shops of generous proportions in Cleveland he felt he was in a real city. The municipal play-grounds and parks and the net-work of radial railways from town to town were other features that impressed him favourably. Motoring home from Detroit the party varied the route coming by London, Stratford and Clinton. South of London they found the barley and wheat cut and oats ripening. On Monday night they arrived home after having covered a good many hundred miles of the choicest country to be seen anywhere.

A False Report

An unkind report which has circulated regarding the manner of the death of the late Philip Gress of Carrick, is absolutely erroneous and has served only to cause additional distress to the bereaved family in their hour of sorrow. Mr. Gress was a man of very fine character and his memory will long be venerated in the community where he lived all his life, using his best efforts to advance good citizenship.

Gets Good Appointment

Mr A. D. Lamont B. A., Mathematics Master of the Walkerton High School, has tendered his resignation and has accepted an appointment as head of the Mathematical Dept. on the staff of the London Technical School at a salary of $1600. This is an increase of $400 over his present salary. Mr Lamont is an honor graduate of Queen's University and well qualified in the department of which he has made a specialty. While sorry to lose him as a citizen, his many friends here are glad to see him move a step up the ladder in his profession.

Takes Step Up

Mr. Robert J. Walton, who with his wife and little daughter, has been holidaying at Rev. J. W. Sanderson's, received word last week of his appointment to the Trainmastership of C. P. R. District No 2 with Headquarters at Toronto. Mr. Walton is a comparatively young man who has made rapid progress in railroading. Starting at the foot of the ladder in his native town of Havelock, Ont., he has risen by successive steps within a very few years to his present responsible position. For twelve years he was locomotive engineer, and latterly he has had under his supervision among other duties the railway shops at Havelock where he filled the humble position of call-boy not many years ago.

Home Made Happy

The home of a respected citizen in a nearby town was made happy on Monday, through the efforts of Inspector H. W. Elliott of the Children's Aid Society. A babe had arrived in the home but had died shortly after birth. This was the third time the same thing had happened. Fears were entertained for the recovery of the mother. Through the Children's Aid organization Mr. Elliott, was able to place in the home a fine young babe a few days old which was an embarrassment to its parents and was destined to be neglected. The child took at once to its foster mother and the latter showed improvement and takes great delight in the little one. Again on Tuesday Mr. Elliott went to Palmerston and secured the return of a babe to its mother, a soldier's wife living at Kincardine. The woman had given away her child without knowing where it was going. The babe was returned to her and the mother was given some good advice and persuaded to stay home and look after the child.

Respected Pioneer Gone

An old and respected citizen passed away early Monday morning, July 22nd, in the person of Henry Opperman, in his 82nd year. He had been poorly for some time and for the last ten days had been confined to his bed. Death was due to old age. Mr. Opperman was born in that Province of Hanover, Germany, while the province was under the British Crown and was thus a British subject. As a young man he came to this country, settling in Waterloo County about 60 years ago where he farmed and worked at his trade as a stone mason. Shortly afterwards he removed to Culross where he resided until retiring to Walkerton 12 years ago. Of genial disposition, strict honesty and kind and obliging as a neighbor he was well-thought-of by all who knew him. Besides his wife, who was formerly Miss Rosina Zuber of Waterloo County, he leaves a family of four sons and seven daughters. They are:—Anthony, hotelkeeper of Formosa; Joseph, Charles and Chris. of Toronto; Mrs. Vincent Measmer and Mrs. Andrew Hauss of Kitchener; Mrs. Jacob Hauss, New Germany; Mrs. Harvey White London; Mrs. Ambrose Fedy, Formosa; Mrs. Jos. Friedman, Allan, Sask., and Miss Teresa at home. The funeral which was held on Wednesday morning at the house and at the R. C. Church was largely attended by old neighbors and friends.

TO IRELAND ON LEAVE

You Can't Help Liking the Irish, This Soldier Writes Home—Every Face You See is Built for a Smile

In a letter to his sister, Mrs. Lorne A. Eedy, Corp. Hugh C. Wilson sends a description of a recent visit to the Emerald Isle on leave:—

H .Q. Co. 8 Can. Res. Bty
Witley Camp, Surrey.
27—6—18.

Tuesday I arose early and after much haste succeeded in catching the 7.38 train for London. I arrived in London shortly after 9. A. M. and took the "Tube" (underground) to Euston station where I ascertained the times of trains for Holyhead. I learned that the first useful train would leave at 6.40 P. M and so I spent the day getting some good meals. To get a meat meal one must produce a coupon and we are all given sufficient coupons when proceeding on leave. The only way to get a full sized meal is to apparently eat two in two different places. Eat a meat meal first and then hurry to another place and consume one for which a coupon is not required. I had dinner and supper in London near Euston and arrived in the station good and early for my train. I went into the enquiry office and learned that the 9.25 train would suit me quite as well. So I turned back and went to the first performance in the Euston theatre. It is known as a Music Hall or a variety show. The first performer was a clown who came out and told jokes. They were good but for some reason he couldn't get the audience started. I was sitting third from the front. Finally he told one that struck me funny and I haw-hawed in my usual uproarious style. I was the only one that laughed and felt oh very much alone. Imagine my squirmings, then when he leaned over the foot lights and with hand upraised said, "God bless you, my son," quite feelingly. The audience simply roared.

From then on I was a marked man each and every performer who came out searched me out and gave me a good wide smile. I really did enjoy that performance. Leaving the theatre at 9 was just able to crowd myself into a seat on the train and was lucky enough to be between two simply irrepressible Irish Corporals.

I had a magazine but was unable to read much in the merry flow of conversation that proceeded throughout the entire journey. I believe I got a better insight of the Irish question than I could have received any other way during that journey.

The Irish are ambitious for Ireland to make truly a great name for herself but owing to such divided views on the means they have not accomplished anything. The man has to arise who can understand the question fully and proceed wisely enough to give them the best thereby, satisfying the majority of the population.

The last glimmer faded from the sky a little after ten-thirty and we saw the first light of the new dawn at 2.30 a. m. Would you believe it? However it wasn't really light until we got on the boat at a little after four. We moved off at 4.45 and though I wasn't sick on the boat I can't say my spirits were boisterous. In fact my spirits were lying down flat and heavy just below my diaphragm which was continually threatening to spring up suddenly.

The hills of Ireland were visible about 8.30 and we disembarked at 9.30. The solid stable unheaving land felt remarkably good to me and I proceeded to be enhungered.

Leaving the North Wall station I was simply mobbed by a bunch of boys who each and every one desired to lead me to the Soldiers Sailors Club. Being tired I allowed one to guide me and after a good meal I freshened up and took a walk around the main streets of the city. At 11.30 I ate again this time I asked for a man-sized steak and got one.

Coupons are not needed in Ireland and as far as food is concerned it is remarkably good, cheap and plentiful. I buzzed around during the afternoon and after a show at night retired immediately in a little room all by my self at the S. and S. Club that I had engaged for my stay.

I had intended spending my leave in Belfast but owing to the fact that that city was put out of bounds the day I landed in Dublin I was forced to be content to remain there.

There are lots of pretty girls in Ireland and everyoneman, woman or child whom I was fortunate enough to enter into conversation with, treated me like a prince.

The policemen of Dublin are the finest bunch of men I have ever seen. Some must be fully eight feet high. I asked one to direct me he answered, Oi will, would ye be walkin' or roidin' in a thram," I enjoyed getting anybody to talk to me, it can't be beaten, the Irish brogue. It is commonly said that the man from Dublin speaks the best English and with greater correctness than any other British subject and I believe it, for the educated Irish certainly speak great English.

Another thing that struck me warmly is the way they take liberties with you. For instance on the train to Holyhead one of my Corporals calmly went to sleep resting against me. In a picture show a man in front of me rested his elbow and forearm on my knees throughout the show.

I went to Hippodrome one night and an old lady with flowers stopped me and said, "Mishter, Mishter won't you buy a bit flower to kape ye from frettin." Talk about coaxing, they coax you to buy flowers and papers on the street and in the store you feel you must buy something. There is an intangible something nice born in the breast of every Irishman and you can't even feel veexed with the worst of them.

In London the people are all hurrying to and fro with a fixed seriousness on all their faces. In Dublin every face you see is built for a smile. You can't help liking the place, nobody can.

You hear a lot about how dirty the people are and most of it is true but the streets are remarkably free from women of easy virtue.

Speaking of streets, Dublin streets are remarkable. You'd swear it was a modern city they are so wide.

One morning I took a train to Phoenix park and from there took a walk into the country. However so close to the city I could tell no difference in the nature of the place from English Country I have seen.

I intended coming back to London on Friday but both boats were full up and I was only able to leave by the fast mail boat on Saturday morning. The sea was rough but having had a good breakfast I felt fine and though the ship pitched and tossed I could only hang on and laugh at the queer antics of others who were hurled from one side of the boat to the other.

LETTER FROM ENGLAND

Crown Attorney Thomas Dixon had an interesting letter this week from a friend living in the north of England telling of conditions there. We reproduce some portions for our readers:—

We had a very fine month of May but June has been excessively dry and cold with withering winds which is doing much harm to both farm and garden crops. The corn crop has looked well until lately but now they are feeling the want of rain badly. The turnip crop is going to be a failure if we don't get rain soon. We have only had 41 in. so far this month. In this part we require a good deal of rain at this time as the land is light and gravelly. The fruit crops are going to be poor all over England as reported in the papers. We had a grand prospect for apples but the bloom has failed to set from what cause I don't know as the weather was favourable at the time, no frost. Gooseberries, and Black currants are a poor crop, but that does not matter does not matter much as we can get so little sugar to preserve the fruit. Growers of fruit are only allowed 6 lbs for each person in the family for jam making, over and above the weekly allowance, which is half pound each so we cannot save much out of that for jam. I have got several papers from you lately, one Walkerton paper I was surprised to find my letter inserted, I did not expect it would have been of so much interest. I believe the Canadians are getting far through their timber cutting at Chillingham. I don't know where they will go to from here. One of the men that stands on the saw bunch and controls the log met with a bad accident some little time ago. After the log had passed through the saw it did not fall over as it should do, he stretched out his foot to push it off when the saw caught his leg and took a part off, and in falling the saw got him again and cut off a piece more.

We had a thunderstorm here about the latter part of May which destroyed a very fine specimen of what we call Wellingtonia gigantia, or Sequoia as it is named in America. It grew about 150 yards from our house, and was about 70 ft high and its girth was 18 ft 2ft from the ground. I had just come down stairs at half past six in the morning and had heard thunder in the distance, but none near. I was looking out of the window when such a flash and crash all at once which made me jump. I felt sure something had been struck, about 20 feet was broken off and thrown to the ground and the main trunk was rent and split to the ground. It is the first time I have seen the timber of its kind. It is very coarse-grained and soft. We have several very good specimens here but it was the largest. The seed was brought from California I think about 70 years ago and raised in the hothouses here. We had a letter from one of our three nieces who are farming near London and she says they had had two nights of sharp frost. They run a dairy farm and have 40 cows in milk which they deliver to the houses round there.

I think I have nothing more of interest to write so will close with kindest regards to you all.

It is now estimated that the field crops in British Columbia will this year exceed a value of $25,000,000. The major item in the estimate is that of hay and clover, which is given at $10,000,000.

BIT OF FAMILY HISTORY

Recalled By Former Walkerton Man—What Time Has Done since the Battle of Waterloo.

An old Walkerton boy, Mr. H. M. Hefferman of 601 Holden Ave., Detroit tells an interesting bit of family history showing what time has done since the Battle of Waterloo. Mr. Hefferman tells that his grandfather on his mother's side was a German and fought under Blucher, the German general who arrived at Waterloo just in time to turn the tables on Napoleon and win the final Battle and the war for the Duke of Wellington at the very time when Wellington was surrounded by his few remaining soldiers and praying for night or Blucher which caused Napoleon's down fall and also the placing of him on the Island of St. Helena for the remainder of his life and when he died, the great Duke of Wellington in viewing his remains sobbed and cried like a child. Wellington was an Irishman and had an Irish heart and Britain's past great victories have all been won by Irish Leaders. Well so much for the Irish. After the war was over, says Mr. Hefferman, my grandfather went to England and became a British soldier and was stationed for a time in England, then sent to Ireland for a considerable time and there courted and married my grandmother. They were then transferred to the Rock of Gibralter where my mother was born, a place where very few have had the honour of being born—on that famous Rock which is the greatest fortification in the world. My grandmother often spoke of a time when my mother just walking nicely strayed away from the house very quickly and when my grandmother found her she was sound asleep and a regiment of monkeys had her surrounded and were fussing with her hair. Of course monkeys are very numerous on the Rock and no one is allowed to harm them in any way. My grandfather was then sent to Quebec and after a time was discharged and given a hundred acres of bush land about 10 miles from the present City of Ottawa, the Capital of Canada but at that time called Bytown and the farm is still in the family. The Ottawa Valley became the greatest lumbering district in Canada and the bears and wolves were as plentiful as the timber. When it was a common thing to be treed by wolves when coming home on foot with provisions in a bag and sit there till daylight when the wolves would disappear and your wife at home wondering if you were eaten up provisions and all or roosting in a tree. That was when life was worth living! At that time England and Germany fought side by side to conquer France and Napoleon. To-day France and England are fighting side by side with their allies to conquer Germany. Now, writes Mr. Hefferman, the Kaiser is about where Napoleon was—near and yet so far—and wondering where he will end his days and whether at his death his opponents will sob and cry as We.lington did over Napoleon.

OLD BILL'S THANKSGIVING TREAT

"Well, he is this kind of a man," said the livery stable keeper when I asked him about his townsman, Deacon Opdyke: "Last year the deacon had some extra work to do on his farm on the upper road, and I hired out my Old Bill to him. At the end of a month the horse came back in good condition, the deacon paid the price, and everyone concerned was satisfied, including Old Bill I guess. Along about Thanksgiving time the deacon dropped in here and inquired about the horse. Seemed real pleased when I told him Bill was spryer than usual after his summer's work. Asked to see him, but the horse was out on a job. 'Quite a member, of society, that horse is," he said, and went away after inquiring how many horses I had in the stable, boarders and all.

"Thanksgiving morning there wasn't much doing here after the regular chores were done, and we all sat round the office stove, when the deacon's hired man drove up and unloaded a gunny sack full of something. I remember thinking he had borrowed that kind of satisfied smile of the deacon's as he said I would find a note inside the bag, I did; and this as about what it said:

'You will find enough carrots here to give every horse in the stable a good dessert after the regular feed today. Be sure and have them cut fine enough so they won't choke and tell the horses that old Bill is standing treat."

"That's the kind of a man I've found Deacon Opdyke to be," said the liveryman, with what I thought was considerable conviction.

Nursing sisters who have cared for soldiers in France and England declare that it is going to be hard for them to go back to nursing civilians. The soldiers are so patient and cheery, so appreciative of all that is done for them, make light of pain and treat the nurses with so much consideration, that the contrast to the ordinary grumbling and exacting sick civilian is very marked.

PUBLICITY
Knows No Seasons

ADVERTISING, in spite of all the hard knocks it has received, continues to grow each year. It is essential. It is the power behind the selling organization. Take away the element of advertising and the business world would lie stagnant and at a standstill.

AND advertising knows no seasons—it just keeps everlastingly at it: the most efficient and persistent salesman on our payroll.

AFTER advertising all through your "regular season" you are losing mighty value publicity by discontinuing your "ad." People have now become accustomed to your store news and the time is coming when they are going to need something exactly in your line.

YOUR ad. is a constant reminder—if it appears regularly. The sign above your door is seen only by people who pass your store—an advertisement in The Walkerton Telescope—the paper that goes home, is seen and read by the majority of the people in Walkerton and vicinity each week. So don't make the mistake of advertising just in your particular "season"—keep your name before the public the year round.

OUR BRUCE HIGHWAYS

Scheme for Providing This County With Good Roads As Outlined in Report presented By Chairman Whicher of the Highways Committee.

Everyone is interested in the good roads project. To give our readers a proper idea of what is being accomplished by those in charge of the Bruce County System under the organized efforts to make improvements, we print below an extract from the June County Council proceedings that did not appear in the newspaper report published a couple of weeks ago. This is part of the report made by Reeve Whicher, chairman of the Highways Committee:

I have the honor to present herewith the First Report of the Bruce County Highways Committee. In doing so we are much impressed with the work with which we have been entrusted, fully realizing the greatness of the task to create and bring into operation an organization for the satisfactory care and maintenance of our County Highways. Such a system, with the co-operation and help of Road Supt. Izzard (who has a very extended knowledge of the County), we have endeavored to establish, but without any equipment or road machinery. Owing to the unusual difficulty in getting delivery of such purchases, together with the scarcity of labor, we have not been able to make the progress we desired. However, we are making advancement and hope to soon show increasing progress.

The following is a brief outline of the System we are endeavoring to organize, viz: To establish on or about every seven miles of the System a responsible man, or overseer, fully equipped with road drag, pick and shovel whose duty will be to care for that particular section of the road, dragging it from time to time, and especially early in the spring; to make minor repairs as approved by the Road Superintendent, also reporting to him from time to time other needed work, or machinery required for the needs of the road, such as grader, &c.

With a complete organization of this kind your Committee believe the entire staff of overseers with their helpers could be placed in operation almost simultaneously throughout the County, thereby having the entire System repaired in the course of a few days. This would be very important, as the value of drags and graders largely consists in the work being done at the right time.

Your Committee and Superintendent found it necessary to secure at least a small equipment of road machinery in order to make a start in caring for the System, the chief purchases being a tractor costing $1700; grader, $595, both hitches; some 90 road drags at $12 each; and a Chevrolet car, practically as good as new, at $550. The car we consider exceptional value and of absolute necessity to enable the Superintendent to do his work.

Your Committee, Superintendent and Government Engineer Huber went practically over the whole System, viewing bridges, culverts and needed repairs to the roads and extension of the System as asked for at last session of Council. The work was done with the County car, and a good knowledge of the System obtained at a comparatively small cost.

We also attended, on the invitation of the Deputy Minister of Highways, a meeting of the Good Roads Association at Toronto, and thereby gained further knowledge of the work. Your Committee when in the city, with the courtesy of our member for North Bruce, secured an interview with the Minister of Highways, in which we placed before him the substance of Resolution No. 99 of the January Session, 1918, in which was set forth that the portion of the County Highways north of Wiarton where, on account of there being no railway facilities, it had to sustain an unusual amount of traffic and should therefore be named a Provincial County Highway and thereby be entitled to 60 per cent. for construction and 40 per cent for maintenance instead of 40 per cent and 20 per respectively, as at present. The Minister was impressed with these views and gave us assurance that this would be accepted by the Department as soon as our Council would pass a resolution naming this portion of the road entitled as above stated.

Owing to the unusual severeness of the past winter a considerable expenditure was required to keep the System in passable conditions, and in order to reduce this expenditure we believe the erection of wire fences should be encouraged by bringing the bonus of 25c per rod offered by this Council more into public notice.

Reeve Brown, of Chesley, attended as executive meeting of the Provincial Good Roads Association in Kingston last week. The committee of 12 went in autos to Gananoque, thence by boat to Clayton, N. Y., and motored to Watertown, a distance of 22 miles, in 31 minutes. This famous roadway is the best country road he ever saw.—Chesley Enterprise.

Town and District

It is reported in Chicago that the William Davies Co., packers, of Toronto, will erect a new plant costing $800,000.

So great is the demand for castor oil as a lubricant for aircraft machinery that more than 70,000 acres in the United States has been planted to castor beans.

"Dispose of old hens," is the advice the Uxbridge Journal gives poultry raisers. A word of admonition might be added: "But don't sell them as spring chickens."

A couple were out motoring. She insisted that he allow her to run the car. After some persuasion, he reluctantly acquiesced and his fears were soon realized "Oh, Reuben," the girl cried excitedly "take the wheel, quick! Here comes a ditch."

Mt. Forest has passed a by law requiring all places of business to close at 12.30 p. m. on Friday during July and August, and at 11 p. m. on Saturdays. A fine of from $5 to $50 may be imposed for violation of the by-law. The regulation was passed on recommendation of the Board of Trade.

The military police of No 1 District are kept busy combing the lists of those failing to report under the military service act. Henry Lemar of Formosa was taken down to London after having failed to respond to the call. He claims he was busy and was trying to clear up some work before going.—London Advertiser.

Two small boys who had grown weary of their game, were arguing rather heatedly regarding a new form of amusement. At last one of them was struck with a sudden inspiration, and said to the other:

"I know!" Let's see who can make the ugliest face."

"Gowan!" replied his chum. "What d' yuh mean by it? Look what a start you've got!"

Offering Bonus For Bears

Two bears were trapped near Golden Valley, in Arnabel Tp. last week. Bears have become so numerous there that the Township Council offers a bonus of 10.00 for each bear trapped as the farmers were suffering severely through their flocks of sheep being attacked.

Chesley Takes Trophy

Two games were played here during the past week for the Keystone trophy Cargill were here last Thursday but the local rink won out, being eight shots up on the game. A Chesley rink was here on Monday and they had better luck, taking the trophy home with them. The game was a tie with two ends to go, but in the next end with a lucky trail of the "cat" Chesley counted 4, and this proved too much for the local rink to overcome in the last end.—Southampton Beacon.

A Bad Accident

Mr. John T. Rettinger of Formosa sustained a heavy loss through an accident which occurred on his farm on Monday evening of last week. He was engaged in cutting hay, and in going down a hill the catch on the tongue of the mower broke off, allowing the tongue to slip through the ring of the neck yoke. The machine ran up on the horses and one of the animals, a good mare, became entangled in the knives of the mower. In the terrible struggle which followed one of the animal's hind legs was completely severed, and the other was terribly lacerated. As there was no possible chance of the animal's recovery, Mr. Rettinger mercifully put an end to her life by shooting her.

Gas At Hepworth

Drilling operations for gas at Hepworth have been successful and last week a splendid flow with a pressure of about 450 lbs. on the six inch well was struck at a depth of 1416 feet. Other wells will be sunk this summer. There was quite a supply of gas struck at Hepworth several years ago but fuel was so cheap then that no effort was made to sink enough wells to make the supply profitable by carrying it to other centres by pipe lines. Now that coal and wood have become scarce and expensive the prospects of a plentiful supply of gas at Hepworth will be of great interest not only to citizens of Hepworth, but of Wiarton, Shallow Lake, Owen Sound, Tara and other neighboring towns.

A Lively Runaway

Mrs Brick, of Greenock, whose husband is employed on Senator Donnelly's farm, had a miraculous escape from serious injury or death while driving into Paisley on Saturday afternoon. She was coming up the hill at the railway bridge when overtaken by a runaway team which collided with her buggy and made a total wreck of the rig, while she had part of her clothing torn off in the mishap. The team was owned by Mr. John Robinson, of 7th Elderslie, who had left them at Mr. D. Dunlop's gate while he went inside to get some bee boxes. Following the collision all three horses galloped down Inkerman St., and were caught near the fair grounds, none the worse of their flight. Mr. Robinson has, we understand, agreed to pay $40 for damage to the rig driven by Mrs. Brick.—Paisley Advocate.

Reeve's Report

Report of Reeve re the Bell and Sittler drain. This is to certify that I have examined the Bell and Sittler drain and also the drain running through Robt Bell's, Nixon Melvin's and Hy Huffman's. I found the branch drain working satisfactory. But I would recommend that the main ditch be deepend about one foot for a distance of say 40 rods west of the gravel road and cleaned out east of the gravel road as far as the inspector considers it necessary. I would recommend that an open ditch be made on west side of the gravel road from the main ditch to a culvert crossing the road some distance from the main ditch.

All of which is respectfully submitted
Wm. Case Reeve.

Armstrong—Thompson That the report of the Reeve re the Bell and Sittler drain be adopted and we appoint the Reeve to arrange to have the same done as soon as the water is low enough to permit.—Carried

The Finance report was read and adopted. The Council then adjourned to meet again on Monday Aug 12.

Common Sense

A young man trying for a job on the New York police force was asked the following question:

"A man buys an article for $11.25 and sells it for $9.75; does he gain or lose by the transaction?"

After pondering over the question, he replied: "He gains on the cents, but loses on the dollars."

USE A HYDRAULIC RAM

Now Recognized As the Cheapest Power for Pumping.

When and How It Is Used—Complete Information Given — Tuberculous Cows a Menace to Health—How Tuberculin Test Is Made — Why It Pays Farmer to Test Cattle and to Discard Reactors.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

WHERE conditions are suitable for an hydraulic ram it is without question the cheapest and most satisfactory method of pumping water. It has one drawback—it wastes fast more water than it pumps to the buildings, and hence can only be installed where the supply is from five to twenty times as great as required at the buildings. The efficiency of the ram is from 65 to 90 per cent., i.e., it uses 65 to 90 per cent. of the energy of the falling water. Suppose the spring supplies 10 gallons per minute and the fall from the spring to the ram is five feet. Multiply these together and then take 65 per cent. of the product, and we have the energy available for driving water to the buildings.

Energy in this case 65-100 x 10 x 5 foot-gallons—32.5 foot-gallons. Now divide this by the height of the buildings above the ram and we have the number of gallons the ram will deliver per minute at the buildings. If, for example, the height is 32.5 feet then

Number of gallons per minute—32.5 divided by 32.5—1 gallon, which is 1-10 of the water supplied by the supposed spring.

Number of gallons per day—60 x 24 —1,400 gallons (about 29 barrels). Consequently with five feet of head and 32.5 feet of lift the ram will deliver at the buildings 1-10 of the water in the spring. The quantity that will be delivered with other heads, lifts and spring-flows may be calculated in a similar way.

Generally speaking it is found that for each 10 feet of lift there should be one foot of head, but there is a limit—it is seldom advisable to install rams where the head is less than say two feet, although they have been known to work with as little as 18 inches. The length of drive pipe should not be less than three-quarters of the vertical lift to the buildings, nor less than five times the fall from the spring to the ram. It may however, be longer, but seldom exceeds 50 feet, and 75 feet might be taken as an extreme length for sizes of ram suitable for farm conditions. If too long a drive pipe be used, the extra friction in it prevents the water from striking as heavily or as frequently as with a drive pipe just the right length.

The cost of installing a ram is not great. For the smallest size of ram it will run in the neighborhood of $35 to $35 and about $15 extra for each hundred feet between the spring and the ram. Thus if they were 100 feet apart the total cost would be from $40 to $50, but if 200 feet then from $55 to $65, and other distances in proportion. The largest size of standard ram can be installed at about $100 if the ram and pump are 100 feet apart, and $125 if 200 feet apart.—R. R. Graham, B.S.A., O. A. College, Guelph.

Tuberculosis In Cattle.

One reason why farmers should bare their cattle tested for tuberculosis is the financial loss which they suffer by having tubercular animals in their herds. As the disease is at first slow in development and does not induce sudden death, like anthrax, black leg or hog cholera, the farmer does not realise the loss that he endures by having tuberculosis in his herd until one or more animals develop the disease in an advanced degree and die or are slaughtered, when they are at once seen to be rotten with the disease. Such animals will have had the disease a long time without it being suspected and will have been giving off in their milk, saliva and droppings, large numbers of tuberculosis bacilli. In this way the bacilli are spread around, the food, water and atmosphere in the stable get contaminated with them and other members of the herd contract the disease from these contaminated materials.

The tuberculin test will indicate whether or not an animal is tubercular long before any clinical symptoms are visible, thus enabling one to deal with such an animal before it becomes a dangerous spreader of the disease.

When an animal is shown to be tubercular it should not be allowed to mix with the rest of the herd. When cattle are purchased to add to the herd it should be only when subject to the tuberculin test, as cattle may have every visible indication of good health and yet be tubercular, the disease not yet having developed to an advanced degree.

It is therefore strongly recommended that farmers

1st. Have their herds tested for tuberculosis with the tuberculin test.

2nd. That they slaughter the animals that have the disease in an advanced degree.

3rd. That they separate the cattle that react to the test from those which do not react.

4th. That they remove the calves from tubercular mothers as soon as dropped, and feed them on milk from healthy cows or on their mother's milk after it has been properly pasteurized, i.e., after it has been heated to 145 deg. F. for half an hour.

5th. That they apply the tuberculin test to every new purchase of cattle that are to be placed in the clean herd.

6th. That the herd be tested with tuberculin annually.

Obtaining Tuberculin for the Test.

The manufacture and supply of tuberculin is kept under the Dominion Government control. It is required that a veterinarian be employed by the farmer to make the test.—Prof Dan. H. Jones, Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph

TELESCOPE LETTER BOX

MAJOR MOFFAT RECEPTION

Editor Telescope

Dear Sir:—

At a Reception given in honor of two or three returned soldiers held in the Town Hall on Thursday evening last, a message was flashed over the foot-lights asking to have the proceedings delayed as Major Moffat would arrive on the evening train, which he did and was escorted to the platform amid some scattered applause. Then he was made the recipient of the usual ten dollars as a recognition of services rendered in defence of King and Country. At this juncture some men who had sons in France left the Hall in disgust.

Then Maj. Moffat went on to explain why he was here at this time. The first reason was that his wife was at death's door, an acknowledgment pure and simple that winning the war was a secondary consideration with him. The second reason that he had come in the interests of the boys of the 160th pertaining to a land settlement scheme such as establishing colonies up in New Ontario or in the West or in any place of isolation.

Now such a scheme is not at all feasible. All our boys will not want to farm and those who do let me say that the farms of Bruce are none to good for them. Then there will be others who will want to take up other callings in life. They too must get assistance. However, be that as it may, we in Bruce will take no advice in this matter whatever from Major Moffat, who has been a great disappointment to the people of this county. It was he who went from platform to platform telling appreciative audiences that he would stick to the boys through thick and thin and that he would never stop until they marched side by side through the streets of Berlin.

It was he too, that pointed out many young men in this vicinity as being yellow. Many of these same young men are to-day in France.

Since December 1915, Major Moffatt has cost this country in the neighborhood of twelve thousand dollars and what have they to show for this vast sum.

Now, may I suggest that the reception committee of Walkerton be a little more guarded in dealing out the Preparedness League money in such loose fashion as in the case of Major Moffat.

Frank Rennie

Walkerton, July 22rd.

CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY

Editor Telescope

Dear Sir:—

Will you kindly allow us space for reply to the letter in your last issue criticising the action of The Children's Aid Society. The Board came to the conclusion a long time ago that a younger, and more active man was required to fill the position Mr. Elliott now fills, than the former occupant, and tried for months through Mr. Kelso of Toronto, and others, to secure a suitable person. At last Mr. Kelso recommended Mr. Elliott, and the board after making inquiries, and satisfying itself that he would likely be a suitable man, engaged him.

A person having previous experience is required, as the whole County, which is a large one, required organizing, which had never been properly done, and this experience we learned Mr. Elliott had.

We pay Mr. Elliott $75.00 per month and the Government pays him $40.00 per month, so he is not costing the County $1500.00 per year.

The Society before engaging Mr. Elliott, would have been glad to have secured a returned soldier having the necessary qualifications, and may still engage such so if the writer knows of such, we will be glad to learn his name.

As to the purchase of an automobile, Mr. Elliott had to go, and still has to go over the whole County. He may be called away at any time to inquire into a reported case or take possession of one or more children, and bring them to Walkerton, and it was thought that it would be more economical to purchase an automobile than to hire conveyances. The Society tried to purchase a second hand machine, but finally decided to buy the one they did and it is the intention to sell it as soon as Mr. Elliott shall have completed the work of organization, in which he is now engaged.

Permit us to add that the Committee is composed of busy men and women, who devote a great deal of time and work to the discharge of their duties which often require the solving of difficult questions and do their best to provide for the children who require their care.

Children's Aid Board.

The Call To Knox Church

Bruce Presbytery will hold a special meeting on Tuesday, July 30th to deal with the call to the pastorate of Knox Church, Walkerton, to Rev. W. H. Burgess B. A. of St. Pauls Church, near Chatham.

RETURNED SOLDIERS

Given Public Reception At Town Hall —Major A. McLean Moffat Arrives on Late Train and Addresses The Meeting

A large number of the people of Walkerton assembled in the Town Hall on Thursday evening to do honour to three more of our soldiers who have returned from service overseas. Mr. L. C. Benton acted as chairman and Rev. R. Perdue presented each of the three, Captain Farquhar Shaw, Ptes. Arthur Farrer and Charles Bryce the address given by the Bruce Preparedness League in recognition of their valour and services. Pte. Charlie Bryce was the first of the soldiers to speak. He said nothing of himself, but took the opportunity of thanking the ladies of Walkerton for their kindness in sending parcels. Pte. Arthur Farrer followed with a few remarks of a similar nature. It was felt that there, was much that both boys might have said about their experiences in France, but both showed the reticence which we have come to regard as characteristic of the men "over there" who have really done and suffered.

Captain Shaw disclaimed any right to be called a hero as he said he had been only ten weeks in France.

Like the Walrus he talked "of many things" and his quoting of a verse of that old rhyme brought a smile to many faces. Captain Shaw kept the audience in smiling good humour throughout his entire speech. His suggestions as to what it is worth while to send in parcels to the soldiers will be followed by many. In a very few words he told something of the history of the Bruce Battalion since it has been broken up into separate units.

Jean Norrish gave a reading which aroused a good deal of laughter and added to the enjoyment of the occasion. An orchestra of three members also furnished a number.

To the surprise of a great many present Major Moffat arrived before the evening was over. The Major received a good reception. He spoke of his disappointment at not being accepted for service in France and mentioned a number of the officers of the 160th who are making good in various capacities. He lauded the Bruce Battalion and assured the people of Walkerton that in England Bruce is the best advertised county of Ontario. His regret at leaving the boys of his battalion, he said, was very keen and he was resolved to do all he could to make the boys who are returning sure of a good job. Major Moffat announced that he has been accepted as a major in the United States Army.

The meeting was dismissed after the singing of the National Anthem and a prayer by Rev. J. W. Sanderson.

Killed By Steer

Joseph Meyer, a former Walkerton butcher, met his death at Kitchener a few days ago. Meyer was in the act of killing a steer at the slaughter house when the animal drove his horn into his chest, inflicting fatal injury.

Land For Bruce Soldiers

The Bruce Preparedness League has lately been in communication with the Dominion Government and various Provincial governments with a view to having land set aside for Bruce County soldiers returning from the Front. Sec. McNab has already had very favorable replies from some of the officials written to. On Friday the Executive of the League met Major A. M. Moffat in regard to his proposed scheme to form a community settlement of Bruce boys at the conclusion of the war, possibly at some point in Nothern Ontario or the Canadian West. The Executive passed a resolution asking the government to send an official to the Canadian West in company with Major Moffat to spy out lands, and suggesting that the expense be met by the government. The same suggestion was made to the Provincial Government re Northern Ontario. Major Moffat recently turned over to the Bruce Preparedness League as a depositary the chattles of the 160th Batt'n on being disbanded, also a cheque for some $1500, funds left over and an itemized statement of same. The League in accepting the same, passed a resolution of thanks to Major Moffat.

DEATH OF PHILIP GRESS

(contributed)

Our sympathy went out to the family of Mr. Philip Gress when we learned of his departure to the World Beyond on July 17th in his 58th year. His health had been failing for some time and on Sunday July 7th while sitting with some of his family he took a chill which settled in his kidneys and liver causing acute congestion of these organs. In spite of all the Doctor and kind nurse could do he passed peacefully away. Mr. Gress was born at Cedar Creek near Galt, Ontario, and when a boy of 14 years of age he came to Carrick with others of the family and they settled on the farm at Otter Creek where he resided until his death. In the year 1890 he was united in marriage to Annie Miller. He was a man of sterling character seeking the welfare of others and ever ready to do that which he believed to be his duty. He was well liked by his neighbors for they found him honest in all his dealings with them. He was a strong temperance worker and took an active part in Sunday School and Young People's Association work of the Evangelical Church of which he was a member. He was also one of the leaders in the Carrick Bible Study Union for eleven years.

He leaves to mourn his loss a sorrowing wife, two sons, Wilfrid and Alton, seven daughters, Mrs. Wm. Klein, Mrs] Emerson Schumacher and Edna of Mildmay, Lillian of Buffalo, Nettie, Pearl and Verna at home, also one brother and three sisters.

The funeral took place to the Mildmay cemetery on Friday after noon July 19th where his favorite hymn "The home of the soul" was sung by the choir. The service which was held in the Mildmay Evangelical church was addressed in the German language by Rev. J. H. Grenzenbach of Walkerton. His text being taken from Isaiah 66 Chap. 13th verse, and in English by Rev. E. D. Becker of Mildmay his text was taken from the same verse Isaiah 66 Chap 13th verse.

The large number of friends and neighbors who gathered to pay their last respects to the departed go to show how greatly he will be missed by all. We extend our sympathy to the family who have lost a faithful and loving father who has gone on before.

Though we may mourn
Those in life the dearest
They shall return
Christ when thou appearest.

Have You, Mr. Business Man?

Business men should have two signs—one on the building they occupy and one in the local newspapers.

Oh, Mary took some lamb to school

A widow in Toronto having eight children dependent on her for support, has been denied a pension by the board. It is admitted that the soldier husband of this woman was gassed in France, after which he had been unable to do anything, so that he procured an honorable discharge from the army. Unfortunately he died while in civil life. Consequently she is denied a pension. Had he been an officer and wealthy, he might have got a pension worth while, though he never saw France. A pension board ought to have a reasonable allowance of common sense.

If there is one enterprise on earth that a quitter should leave entirely alone, it is advertising. To make a success of advertising, one must be prepared to stick like a barnacle on a boat's bottom. He should know before he begins that he must spend money—lots of it. Somebody must tell him that he cannot hope to reap results commensurate with his expenditures early in the game. Advertising does not jerk; it pulls. It begins very gently at first, but the pull is steady. It increases day by day and year by year until it exerts an irresistible power.—John Wannamaker.

Forethought and Good Judgment Used

Travellers show preference for Scenic Route; Busy Men use Night Trains

Nowadays, forethought, and a timely sense of public appreciation play an important part in the construction of a railroad. The Canadian Northern made a happy choice in the selection of its route between Toronto and Ottawa: skirting the shorelline of Lake Ontario and the Bay of Quinte; over the height of land between Napanee and Sydenham, and through Rideau Lakes region, addicted to the daytime journey in Spring or Summer. Comfortable day and night trains, stopping at principal intermediate stations, have made the route very popular.

SUNNY CALIFORNIA

Friend of the Telescope Sends Interesting Sketch of Land of Sunshine and Flowers After a Holiday Visit to That State.

One of the great resources of the state of California is the orange.

Much of the wealth of Southern California comes from the growing of the navel orange. This part of the State is famous as the favorite home of this orange and it is grown there in the greatest quantities.

The story of how the navel orange was introduced goes back to the year 1870. In that year the United States Department of Agriculture brought some small navel orange trees from Bahia in Brazil and planted them in the greenhouses at Washington. It was the purpose of the Department of Agriculture to see if this variety of the orange could be grown profitably in this country. It happened that Mrs. Luther C. Tibbits of Riverside, California, had some friends in the city of Washington who were interested in the new orange. These friends sent three small navel trees to Mrs Tibbits. Mr. and Mrs. Tibbits planted the trees, and two of them grew and bore fruit. Their first successful crop was in 1879.

The new trees became the wonder and wealth of Southern California. Orange-growers at once saw that there was a fortune in this new Brazilian variety. They had been growing the seedling orange. Some of the growers fastened buds from the navel orange trees into the bark of the old trees in such a way that new branches grew from the old trunks. And these new branches bore navel oranges. That is the way the great navel orange industry of California began. Those trees that Mr. and Mrs. Tibbits planted were the parents of numberless trees.

California Oil Fields

Oil production in California is now greater than that of gold. But a few years ago, gold was more profitable than any other mineral product. In 1916 however, it took second place. The value of oil production is now over twice that of the gold.

Go into Ventura, Orange, Kern, Los Angeles, Santa Barbara and Ventura counties, and you will see the famous oil fields. You will be amazed at the forests of towers made of criss-cross beams. There are, in some places, acres and acres of them, with great storage tanks among them. There is a din of engines, a smell of oil in the air. Men in overalls are busy everywhere. Each tower is built over an oil well. The tower was used in drilling the well, and it is now used to support the pumping machinery that draws the thick black oil from the wells. The oil is pumped into the storage tanks and from there is forced through pipe lines that extend from the oil fields to the sea ports. One of these pipe lines extends nearly 300 miles from the Kern county fields to Point Richmond, on San Francisco Bay. California is one of the greatest oil-producing regions in the world. Water equal to the amount of oil it produces would float 300 battleships. The industry brings millions of dollars into the State and gives employment to thousands of men.

There was no sudden oil discovery in California as was the case with gold. Oil was known in California as far back as the time of the mission fathers. Wells were not dug in that day, but the oil that seeped from the ground was used to put on roofs and for other purposes. Several oil wells were dug between 1850 and 1860, but no profit was made, because men did not know how to refine the peculiar, black oil of the California fields.

In 1897 the Los Angeles oil field was opened up and much excitement resulted. In three years, 300 wells were dug. The greatest boom was in 1899 when the Bakersfield region was found to be rich in petroleum. The discovery there made the little town of Bakersfield a city almost in a day. That locality suddenly became one of the richest oil fields in the world. Since 1892 the oil industry has spread to many localities in the State, and has grown with wonderful rapidity.

Gold in California

Gold was discovered in California in 1848. The news spread like wildfire. Within a few weeks, men were stumbling through the brush along the rivers, laden with picks and shovels and hoes and pans, all in a wild search for wealth. Men left their families and their daily work, and rushed off to the mines. Doctors, soldiers, workingmen, sailors, lawyers, all caught the "gold fever" and joined the mad rush.

The news reached the East; it travelled to South America, to Australia, to England, to France, to Germany. From all parts of the world the fortune-hunters began to arrive. Ship after ship brought them into San Francisco Bay. Officers and crews left their vessels and went off to the mines. New crews could not be hired at any price. The Bay became a forest of masts, so many and so close together were the deserted ships.

Men came from the Eastern States by three routes. Many took the long voyage "around the horn"—that is, they came around South America. Others went by ship to Panama, crossed the Isthmus as best they could, and took their chances on getting another vessel on the Pacific side. Great numbers of them made the weary journey overland, across the plains. The sufferings of these men were incredible. Many of them died from exposure and hardship. Thus came the army of "Argonauts" to California. They are known, too, as "forty-niners" as many of them came in 1849. By the end of that year, 100,000 of them had arrived and scattered to the gold fields. In this famous year the amount of gold taken from the mines was $40,000,000. Each year the sum grew. In 1853, $65,000,00 was removed from the streams and mountain-sides.

How The Mining Was Done

Besides the streams and on the hillsides of the Sierras, the miners' "diggings" were to be found. To these "diggings" a steady stream of prospectors came, travelling from San Francisco and other new-born towns. The prospector had his "outfit" made up of pick, pan, shovel, bacon, beans, flour, and a few other needed things. Up the rocky canyons, they trudged by thousands and scattered along the countless streams.

Where mountain water flowed, men could be seen crouching with iron pans. These pans they would half fill with gravel and sand. Then they would dip water into them, and shake them slowly to and fro. They would gradually pour out the water, and with it the loose dirt and gravel, until, if they were lucky there would be nothing left but pieces of gold. This way of mining was called "panning" and in the early days was very common.

Most of the men who mined along the streams, however, used what was called a "cradle" or "rocker." This got its name because it looked so much like a baby's cradle with one end knocked out. Along the bottom of it was fastened a piece of iron with holes punched in it. The earth was dumped into the cradle and water poured upon it. Then the cradle was rocked rapidly. The water would carry the sand and gravel away, while the gold, being heavier, would sink through the holes or rest on the bottom of the cradle.

Irrigation in California

One who travels through the farm and orchard regions of California sees many canals. These canals have been dug to carry water through the land. If he follows one of these canals, the traveler finds that ditches lead from them. Through the ditches the water flows to gardens, fields and orchards. This system of watering the soil is what we call irrigation. Not long ago it was a great risk, in some parts of California, for a man to plant his acres with orchards and gardens. Dry winters ragin alone, leaving the trees and plants to wither and bear no fruit. To meet such a danger, irrigation systems were dug. Such systems were also made to water dry lands, so many crops, or only poor ones could be grown. Thousands of acres in the State are now watered for this purpose. Irrigation is doing more than anything else to increase and improve agriculture in California.

One may ask where this water comes from that flows through the canals and ditches to the rescue of the orchardist and farmer. It comes from distant rivers, from artificial lakes, from reservoirs fed from artesian wells, and is pumped up by electric motors and gasoline engines. Most of the irrigation has been done by companies and corporations. But the State and National Government are taking more and more interest in it. The great irrigation system at Orland was planned and made by the national government for the benefit of the people in that district. Many plans for greater irrigation systems are under way.

The Earthquake and Rebuilding

Nearly all remains of the 1906 earthquake are now eliminated. April 18, 1906 is the date of one of the worst disasters in the history of this country. Early in the morning of that day the counties around San Francisco Bay were visited by a terrible earthquake. Nothing like it had ever happened in the United States since the white man first settled here. For over a minute the earth shook with terrific violence. Many places buildings were destroyed, railways twisted, pipe lines broken, and other damage done. At Stanford University many valuable buildings were thrown down. A large part of the city of Santa Rosa was shattered into ruins. At San Jose, Santa Clara, Palo Alto and other cities, much property was ruined. In San Francisco the shock of the earthquake was followed by a terrible fire. For over two days the flames raged across the city. The water supply pipes had been broken and there was no way to stop the destruction. After the fearful havoc had been done, the people of the city looked out upon a waste of ashes and smouldering ruins.

The news of the great disaster awoke the sympathies of people in all parts of the world. Trainloads and shiploads of food and clothing were sent to help those whose homes and property had been destroyed. But help was not needed for long. The brave citizens soon turned to the task of building upon the ruins. Within a few short years nearly all traces of the disaster were gone from the cities and towns where the havoc had been wrought. A new and more beautiful San Francisco arose upon the ashes of the old. And from it all we draw this lesson: Earthquake and fire may wreck and destroy, but courage and manhood will conquer in the end.

University Of California

While in California, I had the pleasure of visiting the grounds of the University of California, located in Berkeley, across the bay from San Francisco. This is one of the largest universities in the United States. It is maintained by the State, and has branches at San Francisco and Los Angeles, and there is also a University Farm at Davis where the best methods of farming are taught. Branch farm stations are located in several parts of the State.

Professors from the University make trips to the towns and cities to give lectures on various subjects. Much teaching is done by mail. Thousands of farmers all over the State get letters and books from the University, helping them greatly in their work of raising cattle and crops. During every summer vacation a University summer session is held at which hundreds of students gather to improve their education.

Stanford University is another great school of higher education. Together with the University of California, it ranks among the best universities in the country. Stanford University is famous for its beautiful buildings, its excellent teachers, and the fine life of its students.

California has several other excellent schools of higher education. Among these are Mills College, Pomona College, Occidental College, the University of Southern California and the University of Santa Clara.

Opportunities in California

California is the second largest State in the Union. Its territory is so great that room could be found in it for Massachusetts, Delaware, Maine, New Jersey, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, Vermont, New Hampshire and Ohio. And yet in population, California is far behind among the states. New York city alone has nearly twice as many people as there are in the entire state. Think, then, how small the population is in comparison with the size of the State. Think how great a number of people can still find homes within its borders.

California is justly famous for the great wealth that it produces. And yet it can produce several times as much More and more land is being used for raising crops. Great plans for carrying water to the dryer and less useful land are being completed. The Panama Canal is bringing more people and greater commerce to the State. Each year finds more factories and railroads making their appearance.

San Francisco

San Francisco will charm and interest you. It is a new city and yet old in traditions and memories. Many of the greatest men in American letters and arts have lived for a space in San Francisco and all have loved her. It is true that you will not see the city of twelve years ago, but a young, vigorous municipality which is bigger and better than the old. It is a city of hills, which afford different vistas of the most delightful scenery surrounding any city in the world its bay rivals that of Naples, and the Golden Gate leading into it was so named from its resemblance to Constantinople's Golden Horn. Of its location, a well-known author says:—"Few cities in the world can vie with San Francisco either in the beauty or in the natural advantages of her situation; indeed, there are only two places in Europe— Constantinople and Gibraltar— that combine an equally perfect landscape with what may be called an equally imperial position."

The city itself is full of bold hills, rising steeply from the deep water. The air is keen and dry and bright, like the air of Greece, and the waters not less blue.

One of the best ways of seeing the city is to devote a day or two riding about in the street cars and the sightseeing motor cars. A day should be spent in Golden Gate Park alone, where the art of the landscape gardener skilfully has been made to blend with the unspoiled beauty of primitive nature. Spend an afternoon at the Presidio, a United States Government military reservation. It is like a great natural park. Here are located the masked batteries which guard the Golden Gate, and a permanent garrison. From the Presidio you get an excellent bird's-eye view of the Exposition, too.

North Beach and the Cliff House are places of recreation, where your true San Francisican goes for recreation after the work of the day is finished. The Mission Dolores and the United States Mint also are worthy of a visit. Chinatown still exists, a quaint Oriental note on the edge of the down-town district. It is as true a bit of Cantonese life had been set down in modern America. The eight thousand residents of the Chinese quarter have their own newspapers and banks; but it is in their shops and joss houses that the visitor will find the most entertainment. Two solid blocks on Grant Avenue are lined with bazaars, each a museum of Chinese art. The northern extremity of Chinatown merges into the Italian quarter. This alluring city of the Golden Gate comfortably can accommodate a hundred thousand visitors in a thousand hotels of every grade and nationality. Its restaurants and theatres are as famous as those of Paris. One may wander from the exclusive inns of the down-town district like the St. Francis, the Fairmont and the Palace—to the foreign quarters, and in a few minutes revel in the cooking of an Italian cuisinier or sit down to a repast prepared by a chef from Budapest.

Across the bay is Oakland, a thriving city which is rapidly coming to the front. Near Oakland is Berkeley and the State University with its Greek Theatre and spacious grounds. From no point are finer views to be had of the wide sweep of San Francisco's harbor than from the hills immediately back of the University campus, and from those farther north and there are few more inspiring panoramas. To the northeast are the outlines of the giant Sierras; in the immediate foreground, Mount Tamalpais ,the Golden Gate, San Francisco and the peaks behind it, below, far to the south, Berkeley, Oakland, Alameda; and still beyond, the shining waters of the bay and the Coast Range peaks.

Every month has its peculiar charm in this pleasant land. In the valleys and along the foothills there is constant change that gives endless variety and interest to the landscape.

January

In the citrus belt the oranges, lemons and seedless limes show their fruits at the best; magnificent and germinous put forth fresh blossom; almond trees commence to bloom, early potatoes are planted and the rancheman starts plowing.

February

The hills and valleys which began to show green in November and December are carpeted with luxuriant vegetation; potatoes and peas are growing; olives, which started to ripen in September are harvested in January and February; almond trees are in full bloom; the willow takes on its coat of green.

March

This is "Blossom Season." The entire countryside in the valleys and on the foothills is one mass of fragrant bloom. Apricots, almonds, prunes, peaches, pears, cherries—millions of trees, are in full flower. The scene cannot be equaled anywhere in the world. Poppies and wild flowers are beginning to show. Early peas and asparagus are in the market, and vegetables of all kinds are far advanced.

April

Everything is in full verdure. Vegetable of all sorts are in the markets; berries are in full green and putting out blossom; vast fields of tomatoes, of which Central California is the largest producer, are set out; corn is planted; roses, which bloom through out the year, and some of the garden flowers, are showing at their best; haying begins; cherries are ripening.

May

Mowing the great hay fields is in full swing and the country is odorous with the scent of new-mown hay. Grapes begin to blossom; the first crop of alfalfa, which is green all the year, is cut. There is a profusion of roses and of other flowers. Cherries are being harvested; strawberries are plentiful.

June.

Apricots and early peaches are ripening in the valleys. Late cherries are picked; the country is dotted with haycocks and flowers are seen everywhere; raspberries and blackberries are being harvested.

July.

The great fruit canneries start their season, and vast fields of trays laden with golden apricots and peaches are seen drying among the orchards and the aroma of the luscious fruit along the highways is a pleasing sensation. A visit to the canneries is interesting. The harvest of pears begins.

August.

This is the month of the prune, the supply of which comes largely from central California. Peaches are also plentiful. Threshing begins, and the foothills take on a golden brown where the grain has been cut. Trainloads of Bartlett pears are being shipped east.

September.

This is the vintage month. The great vineyards, where fruit began to ripen in August are scenes of intense activity. Wineries begin to crush the fruit, tomatoes, planted in April and May are being harvested and canned. Almonds and English walnuts are being gathered; the second crop of strawberries and raspberries mature.

October.

The vintage is still on. Figs begin to fruit and blossom, the blossom being the fruit itself. This fruit continues to ripen through November. Mariposa lilies grow on the hills, which are a golden brown after the rainless summer.

November.

Vineyards and orchards have taken on the autumn hue, and the Christmas berry appears along the highways. The great seed farms are closing up their season, which runs from April to November. Oranges, ripening first in Central California, are shipped east.

December.

The early rains, beginning in November, have again made the hillsides green. Oranges are being harvested in the citrus belt. A trip over the fine highways through the canyons and valleys is most attractive. The weather is pleasant for motor touring throughout the year.

MILK FLOW DECREASING

Flies, Drought and Heat Cause of Trouble.

Suggestions for Most Profitable Care of Dairy Cows and Calves—August Ploughing and September Cross Ploughing Kills Grubs and Worms In Old Sod.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

DURING the extremely hot weather, cows and calves frequently suffer, sometimes needlessly, from three things—effects of high temperature, lack of water, and from torment by flies.

A great mistake was made in the older parts of Ontario, when practically all the trees were cut down, thus leaving no shade for cattle and other live stock. When the late Prof. Brown was in charge of the Ontario Agricultural College farm and live stock, he planted small groves of trees on various parts of the College farm, and no more pleasant sight may be seen than that of the College herd lying in the shade among these trees on a hot day. These groves make the fields where located rather awkward to work, but the cattle certainly enjoy themselves among the trees. On a live stock and dairy farm, while it may not be advisable to plant trees in the middle of a field, it certainly will pay to have them in as many places as possible, where they do not interfere with the working of the land.

In the meantime, on dairy farms where no shade is available in the regular pasture field, sometimes a good spot can be utilized for the stock during the heat of the day, though they may damage the young trees to some extent. Another plan is to keep the cattle in a darkened stable for part of the day. This means a good deal of extra labor cleaning the stable, and keeping the cows clean, and under present labor conditions, may not be practicable on many farms. However, where there is the necessary labor available and particularly where cows are receiving soiling or silage feed to supplement the pasture, the feeding in the stable may well take place during the day and the cows be kept inside while it is very hot. This plan also saves worry from flies, when the windows are covered to make the stable dark.

Water Necessary for Comfort and Milk Production.

Cows frequently suffer from lack of sufficient water. As a boy, the writer remembers driving cattle to "Duff's Creek," in Brant County, during the hot spells. The cows were nearly crazed when they reached the "creek" and would drink until they seemed like bursting. By the time they reach home, after walking for a sand-a-half over a dusty road, the cattle were nearly as thirsty as ever.

The only safe source of a sure water supply is a deep well, driven or bored, and having the water pumped by windmill or other sources of power, with a storage tank for convenience. There is no part of Ontario which an abundance of water can not be obtained, if we go deep enough to tap the hidden sources of supply.

No matter how it is obtained, the owner of dairy stock, more especially of cows milking, must supply a certain amount of water, else the stock will suffer, which means lessened milk supply, and small cheques from the creamery, cheesery, condensery or city dealer. Milk consists of about 87 ½ per cent. water, and this water must come from the drink and feed of the cow. A cow giving 100 lbs. (10 gallons) of milk daily, will drink over 200 lbs. (20 gallons) of water per day. Cows giving less milk will drink in proportion. Give the cows plenty of water. Young cattle, calves, and hogs also need plenty of clean water in hot weather.

Fly Remedies.

There are several good fly remedies on the market. Where there is time to make one, the purchase of a patent fly-killer or repellent, is advisable. These are usually applied daily, or twice a day with a small hand sprayer.

A home-made remedy may consist of one-half gallon fish oil, or any old grease, one-half pint coal oil, and two tablespoonfuls of crude carbolic acid, cresol, etc. Mix thoroughly. This will be sufficient for forty-five cows and may be applied with a brush or cloth. If there is no fly it will keep the flies off for several days. Milkers must be careful not to get this on the hands, or allow hairs to drop into the milk pail as it will taint the milk. It is better to apply after milking.—Prof. H. Dean, Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph.

What About Seed Wheat This Year?

Good seed of the most desirable varieties of fall wheat is sure to be scarce this autumn. The most of the winter wheat in Canada is grown in Ontario, and the acreage sown in this province last autumn was less than usual. Over fifty per cent. of the crop was winter killed. In numerous instances the wheat which was not ploughed was re-sown with other grains either over the whole area or in patches. Owing to the scarcity of labor it may be difficult to thresh the grain from the good fields before the dates of harvesting and seeding. Those growers who have old seed of good quality should save it carefully for seed purposes. Special efforts should be made to thresh as much of the good wheat of this year's growing as early a date as possible. Farmers having more seed than is required for home use or for sale to neighbors would undoubtedly create a good demand by advertising in either the local or the agricultural papers. Tests should be made of the germination of both the old and the new wheat. Strict economy of winter wheat for seed purposes this autumn is essential.—Dr. C. A. Zavitz, Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph.

TOWN AND DISTRICT NEWS

Many claims are being staked ten miles south of Lake Abitibi, where gold has been discovered.

Alien-owned property valued at millions of dollars is to be put on the market at a series of public sales in the United States.

The Dominion police took 24 men before Magistrate Weir at Kitchener last week, charged with not carrying military papers. Nineteen were fined $5 each, while the other five were sent to London as military defaulters and absentees. For resisting arrest Albert Meyers was fined an extra $20.

A casket arrived at Windsor one day last week. The mourners were at the depot with the hearse, but they did not present a very sad appearance. The liquor inspector seized the body, which proved to be a supply of booze shipped from Toledo. There were a number of thirsty and sad mourners when the casket was taken to the police station.

The first Tommy was ruddy of countenance, with a huge beard of the hue politely known as auburn. The second was smooth shaven: "I used to 'have a beard like that till I saw myself in the glass. Then I cut it off." But the bearded man was not dismayed. "Much better have left it on, mate," he returned gently. "I uster 'have a face like yours till I saw it in the glass. Then I growed this beard.

The great Abraham Lincoln was born in poverty. A home of hardship toil and poverty was the manger in which that great national saviour first saw the light of day; and when he was old enough to attend school the curriculum embraced only reading, writing and the simplest arithmetic. Yet that school of necessity and hardship put a strength of fibre into his character that could never have been developed in ease and luxury.

The Feminine Bond

"What is it, children?" asked the superintendent, "that binds us together and makes us better than we are by nature? Who can tell?"

Little Ellen Smith's hand shot up.

"Yes, Ellen; can you tell?"

"Yes sir; corsets."

Four Legged Chicken

A curiosity in the shape of a four-legged chicken was hatched out recently on the farm of Mr. Henry Moyer of the B. line, Carrick. The extra pair of legs were fully developed as to size, but were of no use to the chicken in assisting locomotion. It was a healthy active chicken until it became about two weeks old, but the extra appendages were too much for it, and it gave up the struggle this week.—Mildmay Gazette.

Everybody Happy

What constitues recreation depends, of course, on the point of view. Here is that of a certain small citizen in a school for dependent children. He wrote to his father thus: "We are having a good time here now. Mr. Jones broke his leg an I can't work. We went on a picnic and it rained and we got all wet. Many children here are sick with mumps. Mr. Smith fell off of the wagon and broke his rib, but he can work a little. The man that is digging the deep will whipped us boys with a buggy-whip because we threw sand in his machine, and made black and blue marks on it. Hurry cut his finger badly. We are all very happy.

Order Re Substitutes Changed

Because of the limited supplies of substitutes for wheat flour at present available the Canada Food Board has deferred until a date to be fixed, the operation of certain sections of that order. Bakers, confectioners, public eating places and private households will not for the present have to use one pound of substitutes to every four pounds of wheat flour in baking. They must, however, use one pound of substitutes to every nine pounds of wheat flour, as provided in the law now operative. Dealers in Eastern Canada, as well as in Western Canada, for the present will be required to sell one pound of substitutes with only every nine pounds of standard flour. The use of a label or sticker on bread is made permissive, and not compulsory.
